New Jersey People Drink More Milk

New Jersey's five and a half million citizens each drank about four more glasses of milk during 1957 than they did in 1956, while average Americans in the rest of the country were drinking about five glasses less.

This fact was revealed in a comparison of New Jersey and national milk statistics released by the New Jersey Milk Industry Association in Trenton and the Milk Industry Foundation in Washington, D. C.

The national milk facts, released in Washington shows that during 1957 the average American citizen drank about five glasses less fluid milk than he did in 1956. Curiously, America's 43 million families each bought about seven and a half more quarts of fresh milk during 1957 than they did in the preceding year.

A public hearing concerning muskrat and beaver trapping seasons has been announced by Salvatore A. Bontempo, commissioner of the New Jersey Department of Conservation and Economic Development. The meeting will be conducted by the State Fish and Game Council at the division of fish and game offices at 230 West State Street, Trenton, at 8 p.m. on Tuesday, February 10.

Consideration will be given to the following proposals for amendment of the Fish and Game code:

That the muskrat trapping season be extended to March 31, 1959.

That the beaver trapping season be extended to February 28, 1959.

These proposals are advanced in view of the low numbers of muskrats taken up to the present time and the frozen condition of the lakes and streams. The extension of approximately two weeks is proposed in order to assure that a sufficient number of animals will be removed.

The First National Bank will change its name to First National Bank of Passaic County effective March 2 if a proposal for the change is approved at the annual stockholders meeting on January 27. The bank management believes the new name will better picture the scope of operations.

The Boy Scout movement has reached ripe middle age. Boy Scout Week, which will be observed during the February 7 - 13 period, will mark its 49th anniversary.

But the passage of time has certainly not dimmed Scouting's vigor. It is looking ahead to ever-greater achievements, to an ever-expanding influence. And in this age, with juvenile delinquency rampant, the movement deserves the active support of every decent and responsible citizen.

In its nearly half-century of existence, the organization has touched the lives of more than 28,500,000 Americans. Today there are more than 5,780,000 boys and leaders playing the "games of Scouting". This works out to one of every four boys in the 8 to 16 year old groups, and the hope is that this proportion will materially be increased.

Dr. Arthur A. Schuck, Chief Scout Executive, puts it this way: "Looking ahead for the next five years we must recognize that never has it been so important or imperative that the youth of our nation be trained to high idealism, acquired through unselfish service, by self-reliance, and co-operative effort."

The ideals and objectives of Scouting have remained unchanged since the movement's birth. But changes have been made in organization methods and operating techniques in order to meet the needs of the time. At the moment, if Scouting is to be brought to more of the boys who want it, there must be more trained leaders and more facilities including camps. Meeting this challenge should be regarded as a pleasure and a privilege.

Meanwhile — Happy Birthday, Boy Scouts!

A FOOD SHORTAGE?

One of the most prominent members of the House of Representatives, who has also been a farmer most of his long life, expresses the fear that the country may run short of food in the next decade or so. He bases this on the heavy exodus of people from the farms to the cities. And this has taken place at a time when the population as a whole has been soaring.

If the grim prospect the congressman envisions is to be avoided, it will be necessary in the future to get maximum production from every acre of farm land — and, equally important, to conserve its productive capabilities for coming generations.

Happily, the farmer has available the tools and the knowledge to make this possible. The farm equipment manufacturers are producing better, more efficient and more economical machines than ever before. New fertilizers and pesticides are performing miracles. And advanced conservation practices — accomplished with mechanized equipment — protect the precious soil from such ancient enemies as wind and water, even as they produce increased income for the farmer.

We have long been plagued with heavy over-production of certain farm crops and this, no doubt, has led many people to think that super-abundance of foods is something to be taken for granted. But it isn't. In a comparatively brief span of years we could have serious shortages instead. The agricultural revolution must keep right on moving ahead.

The Editor Speaks

VINCENT S. PARRILLO

Well, I have come to the conclusion that making money — that is REAL money — requires a certain kind of talent just as painting, composing, acting — yes even writing, requires talent.

If you haven't the gift you won't ever become rich. There's no use killing yourself in the attempt, nor is there any sense trying to acquire the talent.

Very few millionaires have ever been able to tell how they became millionaires. They just attended to their business — they say, and there it was.

I, on the other hand, and a number of other people I know, have busted our heads trying to make a cleanup, but whenever I started on some great scheme which was bound to be successful, there I was — broke.

The main reason, I believe, is that I never paid as much attention to whatever proposition I went into as to the money that was to be made out of it.

On the other hand, I HAVE seen fellows to whom MONEY was their merchandise. They made it thinking of nothing BUT the money they were going to get out of a deal.

Their hearts were as cold as stone. Human beings were there to be shaken down. To them a man was like a sack. You turned him upside down and out came all the money he had in his pockets. They didn't care how much misery they caused. The money was all that counted.

If you belong to the same classification as I do, the "non-millionaire" one, you might just as well be satisfied with what you are, what you have, and what you are able to make.

I would hate to spend some of the sleepless worry-nights those fellows with the millions spend when they get their subpoenas from the Internal Revenue people or a Senate investigating committee.

Special Advisory Council Finds Social Security In Sound Financial Condition

The old-age, survivors and disability insurance program under the Social Security Law is financially sound, Stanley J. Fiorese, District Manager of the Paterson office, announced today.

This was the unanimous conclusion of a special advisory council which reported recently on a year-long study of social security financing. The Council was composed of leaders of business and labor and experts in the fields of finance, insurance and economics.

In its report to the Board of Trustees of the Social Security Trust funds, the Council stated as its "major finding that:

"The method of financing the old-age, survivors and disability insurance program is sound, and, based on the best estimates available, the contribution schedule now in the law makes adequate provision for meeting both short-range and long-range costs."

The program is financed by social security taxes on employees, employers, and self-employed people. These taxes go into two trust funds — one for old and survivors insurance, and the other for disability insurance. The Trustees of these funds are the Secretaries of the Treasury, Labor, and Health, Education, and Welfare.

The Advisory Council, said Fiorese, was appointed last year by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare in accordance with the 1956 amendments to the Social Security Law, and was composed of the following persons:

Elliott V. Bell, J. Douglas Brown, Malcolm Bryan, Arthur F. Burns, Joseph W. Childs, Nelson H. Cruikshank, Carl H. Fischer, Reinhard A. Hohaus, Robert A. Hornby, T. Norman Hurd, R. McAllister Lloyd, Eric Peterson, Charles I. Schottland.

The Council said it "anticipates that further changes in the social security program will be needed as changes occur in the labor force, wage levels, and doubtless in other factors that in a dynamic economy will affect the appropriateness of the program."

In order to keep the system in sound financial condition, the Council suggested "period scrutiny of all factors which in any way affect the financing of the program", including specifically the maximum earnings base for determining benefits and tax contributions.

Under the 1958 amendments the maximum earnings base was increased from $42,000 to $48,000 as of January 1, 1959. The Council did not recommend any further change in the base at this time, but assumed "further consideration will be given to this maximum after the affect of the $4800 figure has been evaluated." The earnings base, the Council pointed out, determines the proportion of the Nation's payrolls available to finance the program and is a major factor in determining the extent to which the program pays benefits reasonably related to the past earnings of the individual.

The Council concluded that no fundamental changes in the methods of financing the social security system are "required or desirable." Some changes were recommended "to strengthen the measures necessary to carry out the basic principles inherent in the program."

The Council endorsed the present policy of investing the trust funds in U. S. Government obligations but recommended a change in the formula for determining interest rates on special issues. The Council said it approved the policy of accumulating more money in the trust funds than would be needed to meet all foreseeable short-range contingencies, but expressed the belief that interest earnings should not be expected to meet a major part of the long-range costs.

The Council expressed the belief that increases in social security taxes now provided in the law for 1960 and 1963 should go into effect as scheduled. The Council also stated that conditions will probably warrant the scheduled 1966 rate increase to four per cent each for employees and employers and 6 per cent for self-employed people.

The Council was doubtful whether the final scheduled rate increase to four and half per cent each for employees and employers, and six and three-quarters for self-employed people, should go into effect as scheduled in 1969.

"However," the Council stated, "we are not recommending that any change be made now in the schedule of contribution rates in present law. Instead, we recommend that future advisory councils, in the light of conditions current at the time of their inquiries, give study to the timing and level of any contribution rate increases to be made after the one bringing the rate to 8 per cent."

The Board of Trustees of the trust funds is expected to comment on the Council's recommendations in connection with its annual report which will be made to the Congress on or before March 1, 1959.

TROUT SOON TO BE LIBERATED IN STREAMS

Trout raised at the Hackettstown Fish Hatchery in preparation for the re-opened trout season on April 11 are in fine condition despite the extreme cold weather in December, according to members of New Jersey Department of Conservation and Economic Development.

Dr. A. Heaton Underhill, director of the Fish and Game Division in the Conservation Department, says the current 1959 trout season will close March 15, and resume April 11. During the interval, trout streams will be stocked from the Hackettstown Hatchery.

Robert A. Hayford, superintendent of Fisheries Management, reports trout being raised in the various pools at Hackettstown have an overall average of a quarter of an inch longer than the trout of last year despite the zero weather in December. Ordinarily, extreme cold weather slows trout feeding and decreases their normal rate of growth. However, if present growth of the trout continues, the over-all average size will be close to ten inches when they are released in the major streams in April.

A tentative trout liberation program being considered by the hatchery experts set a goal of 220,000 trout released before the April 11 opening. Last year 267,000 pre-season trout were distributed and 221,000 fish were released during the season.

MEET MR. LINCOLN

"The ugliest specimen of the human race God ever created," said a colleague when Lincoln was a member of Illinois Legislature.

"He is the handsomest man I ever saw," said a woman whose son Lincoln had pardoned.

"He has a face like a Hoosier Michelangelo, so awful ugly it becomes beautiful," wrote Walt Whitman.

"There is something in his face which I cannot understand. He is great," said Representative Henry L. Dawes of Massachusetts.

(These photographs of a single statue, variously lighted, were made at Lincoln Memorial in Washington, D.C., for the sequence that opens "Meet Mr. Lincoln," an NBC-TV "Project 20" program portraying Abraham Lincoln as his contemporaries saw him. The program, to be telecast Wednesday, Feb. 11, draws upon a wealth of authentic Americana never before tapped for TV.)

HAPPY SCOUNDREL — J. Carrol Naish, for many years a favorite Hollywood character actor, stars in the role of a thief with winning ways who makes off with an entire wagon from the westward-moving train in "The Old Man Charvaneugh Story" on NBC-TV Network's "Wagon Train" Wednesday, Feb. 11.

A sailor, after placing some flowers on a grave in a cemetery, noticed an old Chinaman placing a bowl of rice on a nearby grave, and asked: "What time do you expect your friend to come up to eat the rice?" The old Chinaman replied with a smile: "Same time you friend come up to smell flowers."

"I'm sorry that I haven't a dime," said the lady as she handed the bus driver a ten dollar bill. "Don't worry, lady, you're going to have 99 of 'em in a couple minutes."

Mother: "Where have you been, Johnny?"
Johnny: "Playing ball."
Mother: (severely): "But I told you to beat the rug, didn't I?"
Johnny: "No ma'am. You told me to hang the rug on the line and beat it."

Four flights up TO HEAVEN

The landlady was smiling at them like the wolf in Red Ridinghood.

"You look kinda young to be a married couple."

"Oh we aren't married yet," Peggy blurted out. She felt Bill's fingers tighten on her arm.

"So you better show us that apartment before she changes her mind," he added.

She glanced up at him with a nervous little smile, feeling ashamed, wishing she hadn't let him read her thoughts.

The landlady laughed and Peggy laughed louder than she'd wanted to.

"We want two rooms," Bill said. "Two rooms and a decent kitchen. And not facing on the street, please. Too many trucks in Greenwich Village to suit me."

"I adore the village," Peggy said quickly. The trouble was, the words seemed to jump out before she knew what she was going to say.

Bill stared up at a long crack in the ceiling. "Sure, we adore the Village."

She pinched him when the landlady wasn't looking, and he gave her hair a tug, and everything was all right again. They followed the landlady up the stairs. She had just the thing for them, she said. "A couple of kids like you won't mind walking up four flights."

"Oh, no," Peggy answered. Then she glanced at Bill. "Well, would we?"

Bill looked up at the ceiling again. "Oh, no."

She knew what he was thinking. And it was true. She didn't want to live in a place that had elevators. Bad enough to have him come home talking about them every night. Bad enough to have to answer the neighbors' questions with, "my husband?" Oh he . . . er, sells elevators." She could just see them lifting their eyebrows. "Elevators? Pardon me for smiling. Mrs. Bill, but I never knew any one had to sell elevators. I always thought they . . . just happened."

No, definitely not a place with elevators. She didn't want to be reminded of her husband's business every time she went in and out of the house.

The landlady's short, bowed legs were leading them up the stairs briskly, showing them how easy it was to climb four flights.

"You'll find it nice and quiet here. I'm sure. The gentleman has it now has been there three years. And he's a writer."

"A writer?" Peggy had kind of a funny feeling all of a sudden. Like she'd gone up in an elevator too fast. A writer. That was what she'd always thought she'd marry some day. Or maybe an artist. Somebody like that.

They were walking up the last flight now and some one upstairs opened a door. Don't let him be any better looking than Bill, she begged.

As it happened, he wasn't. He was just a pale young man with glasses. He stood there in his slacks and blue shirt and he looked . . . well, on second glance he looked . . . different. Nobody would ever take him for a life guard. That's what she'd thought Bill was that first time, when they'd met on the beach.

"Come right in." The young man waved something at them. It turned out to be a monkey wrench, of all things. "Don't mind me, I'm just the plumber."

Peggy laughed. It was so unexpected, it made her feel good. "The plumber," she said, as their eyes met, "Imagine."

"Some plumber," the landlady said.

"That's gratitude," he said, looking at Peggy, "I do her a favor and she makes fun of my plumbing."

"I think it's nice if a man knows how to fix the plumbing," Peggy said. She glanced from the thin hands to the thin, pale face. "I really do."

He looked pleased. "I'm a painter, too," he told her. "Look, I painted this china closet. What do you think of the shade?"

It made her feel so flattered to have a writer showing off for her benefit. "It's a lovely color," she told him. And then she could feel Bill's eyes on her. "Isn't it, Bill?"

"Yeah," Bill said dryly. "Blue."

Peggy winced. Well, that proved he wasn't color blind.

"It's the same shade as your hat," this writer was saying.

She blushed. "Think of a man's noticing that."

"Yeah," Bill said. The way he said it, it wasn't exactly a compliment.

"If you want to see the apartment," the landlady began sharply. Then she pulled a smile over her false teeth. "This here's the kitchen."

Bill said, "You mean the apartment opens into the kitchen?"

Behind his glasses, the young man's light blue eyes were looking amused. "Oh, you'll get used to it. And it'll give your friends something to talk about."

"He's some little talker himself, isn't he?" the landlady said.

"I think he's wonderful," Peggy said, laughing. He certainly knew how to make a person feel perfectly at ease.

Then she got a look at Bill's face. She began to feel miserable. If only he wouldn't look like that. Like a . . . She tried to push the thought out of her mind but it came right back again . . . Like a disappointed salesman. I'm sure you'll make a mistake if you don't buy our elevators, Mr. Kitch.

The landlady led them into the living room, and when Peggy saw it, her heart sat up and begged.

Her eyes drank in the book case that covered a whole wall, the original paintings on unframed canvas, the over-sized fireplace with three painted masks above it. And there was a table with a typewriter and a lot of paper piled-up in careless stacks.

What darling taste you have. She almost said it, but thought about Bill just in the nick of time.

"The bedroom's in there," the landlady said. She let Peggy and Bill go into the bedroom by themselves. Bill's head almost bumped the top of the doorway as they went in together.

"This is a dog house," he said. Peggy was in such a daze she thought he said, "Doll's house," at first.

"Isn't it," she said excitedly. And then, seeing his expression, "What?"

"A dog house," he said. "Look, I can almost touch the ceiling. Listen, Peggy, I've learned something about buildings in the elevator business. Do you know how old this house is? Why, it was a dump when they built the Brooklyn Bridge."

Peggy gasped. "He heard you!"

Suddenly all the thrill was gone and her heart felt like lead. Her eyes were blinking as she turned and went back into the living room. Bill followed behind her, stooping with an exaggerated wariness as he went through the doorway.

Her fingers were twisting the engagement ring nervously around and around. One thing was sure, she wasn't going to marry an elevator salesman. Or any other kind of a salesman, for that matter.

"Listen, honey," Bill said gloomily. "If you really like the place . . ."

It didn't matter. Nothing mattered now, really. Just to get out. To get away. To get out of everything as painlessly as possible.

"I guess you have to be a writer or something to appreciate it," she told him, forcing out the words. She glanced at the pale young man and managed to smile. "A writer or an artist."

"Oh, I don't know," the young man protested with a shrug.

"What kind of stuff do you write?" Bill asked grudgingly.

"Huh?" the young man said.

The landlady laughed. "Him? He's no writer. He's my son." And she added proudly, "he sells vacuum cleaners."

Run out of the room. Run down the stairs, she told herself. But Bill's arm went around her shoulders, steadying her, and his arm felt strong and tender.

"My man is a salesman too," she said. And she held her head up. "He sells elevators."

139 Governor St. Paterson,

This Week In AMERICAN HISTORY

BY WILLIAM BRODIE

CLARK WINS THE NORTHWEST

The greatest American hero of the West during the Revolutionary War was George Rogers Clark. He won the vast territory north of the Ohio on February 5, 1779 when, at the head of an "army" of 170 shivering men, he captured the key British post of Vincennes in what is now Indiana.

Tall, blond George Rogers Clark, the young Virginian with the eagle look, was only 25 years of age when he took on the task of conquering the western land from the British and halting the raids of their Indian allies upon the Kentucky settlements. Clark had been a surveyor and had fought against the Ohio Indians. His plan for winning the West was approved by Governor Patrick Henry of Virginia, and in the spring of 1778, George Rogers Clark, holding the rank of lieutenant-colonel, started down the Ohio from Pittsburgh with a band of 180 picked riflemen.

During a summer campaign marked by great hardships Clark captured the British posts of Vincennes, Kaskaskia and Cahokia. Vincennes was in Indiana, Kaskaskia and Cahokia were both on the Illinois side of the Mississippi. The inhabitants of these posts were mainly of older French pioneer stock and they mostly welcomed the Americans.

After his successful summer campaign Clark went into winter quarters at Kaskaskia. Then in January, 1779 he got word of the recapture of Vincennes by a British force led by Lieutenant-Governor Henry Hamilton of Detroit. Hamilton was the hated "Hair Buyer." He got this name from his practice of buying scalps that the Indians brought back from their raids on American settlements. Now he was back in force in Vincennes, preparing for a big spring offensive.

In his winter quarters at Kaskaskia George Rogers Clark boldly decided to attack immediately.

He could muster an "army" of only 170 riflemen, but off they went from Kaskaskia in the bitter weather of February, 1779 to Vincennes, 180 miles to the east. An unseasonable thaw had flooded the flatlands. Clark's men had to wade through swamps and streams, often neck deep, holding their long rifles overhead, while their clothes froze to their bodies. Even when they waded across a shallow lake four miles wide, George Rogers Clark led all the way. He was very strong and tireless and his men were inspired by him. Freezing, hungry, with scanty supplies, they plodded for eighteen days across the flooded wastelands of Illinois. The last six days they had to go with hardly any food.

Finally, on February 23, Clark brought his men to dry land on a knoll behind Vincennes, with not a man lost despite incredible hardships. A rifle shot that dropped a British sentry was the first notice the surprised garrison got of Clark's arrival. All through the night the American riflemen kept up a hot fire on the fort. Every loop-hole was a target for the deadly marksmen.

The next day Clark boldly demanded surrender. Hamilton, believing the American force to be in great strength, asked for terms. Clark insisted on unconditional surrender, under threat of storming the fort. At ten o'clock in the morning of February 25, 1779, Hamilton surrendered and the garrison marched out to lay down arms. Vincennes, key British post, was in American hands.

Hamilton, the bitterly hated "Hair Buyer," was taken under guard to Williamsburg, capital of Virginia. And through the daring and fortitude of George Rogers Clark and his band of 170 ragged, freezing heroes, the western lands north of the Ohio were secured as American territory.
