Traffic On New Jersey Turnpike Increased Over Last Year

NEW BRUNSWICK — Traffic on the New Jersey Turnpike this year to June 26 totaled 18,471,100 vehicles, an increase of 3.8 per cent compared with the same period in 1957, it was reported at the Authority meeting today.

Social Security Law Includes Aged Wives and Widows

Some aged wives and widows who are separated but not divorced from their husbands could be receiving monthly social security benefits on the basis of their husbands' work, if they would come in and file application, Mr. Stanley J. Fiorese, district social security manager, said today.

A 1957 change in the law did away with the requirement that a wife must be living with or, supported by her husband when she files application, and that a widow must have been living with or supported by her husband at the time of his death. Now, a 62 year old wife or widow may be eligible for a monthly benefit merely on the basis of a legal marriage that is still in existence — even though they may have been separated for many years and are at opposite ends of the country. There has been no change in the law with respect to the provision that a wife can receive monthly benefits only if her husband is also receiving his benefit.

Aged wives and widows who believe they can qualify for benefits as a result of this change in the law should contact us promptly to determine what their rights are, Fiorese concluded.

The social security office is located at 245 Market Street, Paterson.

After many requests, the Mayor and Council have scheduled the first Monday of each month as "Borough Clean-up Day." Residents should place all unwanted debris, excepting garbage and ashes, at the curb before 8:30 a.m. on the designated days so borough trucks may completely canvass the borough. The program is scheduled for the summer months, and if it proves satisfactory will be maintained as a permanent feature of borough service. This past Monday was the first scheduled pick-up. Many residents did not have their rubbish in cartons, boxes or other containers and the borough workers had to shovel it into the trucks. This took them so long that Tuesday, they were still out picking up the debris. Residents who put refuse out for collection on these special "Clean-Up Drives" should have their bundles tied up, or in an old container of some kind to facilitate the pickup.

The borough tax collector's office will close Monday, July 21, and will reopen Monday, July 28, while tax collector Joe Garbaccio has a well earned week's vacation.

SUBURBAN

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON —

The fiscal year began last week, and experts generally agree that in the year ending June 30, 1959, the Federal Government will incur a deficit of over ten billion dollars. The deficit for the fiscal year just ended cannot be measured accurately until later in the summer, but it is said to have been about three billion dollars.

Leaders in both political parties are hopeful that there are good enough signs of business recovery now to head off any further moves for a general tax cut during this session of Congress. But the work which has been done on tax-reduction since January will not be abandoned. The way will be open for action along this line early next year if the expected business recovery should still be lagging. One tax relief measure may still be pushed through at this session. That's one to give bigger depreciation credits on new capital investment to help small businesses.

Legislators are trying to finish up this session of Congress by mid-August so they can get home for a brief rest before starting the grueling campaigning in September.

During the first half of this year the construction industry grew stronger. By May, house building rose to an annual rate of more than a million, and highway building climbed as the seasons changed. However, the National Housing Conference reports, after a nation-wide survey, that only three out of ten families in the U. S. can afford to own the cheapest new three bedroom house available in their municipalities. Using a rule that a family should only spend twenty per cent of its income for shelter, and with the average price for a three bedroom house set at $10,900, the Conference estimated that to carry this cost, a family should have an annual income of $6,409. Only 28.5 per cent of American families now have an income, at or above that level.

With summit conference talks now almost gone a glimmering, it looks like the Russians plan some violent house cleaning within their satellite countries, to make sure of their grip on these Iron Curtain countries before again working for a summit conference. Of course, these violent outcroppings can hardly be called peaceful intentions which the summit talks are supposed to deal with mainly.

ASAFETIDA OR SALK VACCINE?

Asafetida is a foul-smelling gum resin derived from a plant native to the Middle East. Superstition and old-wives' remedies once endowed it with sweeping medicinal powers, but science has long since demonstrated its utter worthlessness.

Yet when a terrible polio epidemic struck New York City back in 1916, thousands of people put their trust in little bags of asafetida, tied with a string about the necks of their children. While the toll of the crippled mounted daily, while the virus killed one of every four of the stricken, frightened parents resorted to any measure that gave hope, turning even to the ridiculously futile bags of resin in their desperate effort to hold off the disease.

Today, we recognize the pathetic ignorance which dictated that action. But how much have we profited through new knowledge available to us?

Across the country, drug store shelves and physicians' offices are stacked with bottles of a substance that will protect against polio. It is called Salk vaccine. Its safety is unquestioned. Its effectiveness has been demonstrated dramatically by the rapid decline in cases among the vaccinated. The vaccine is inexpensive, and quickly administered. Yet millions of Americans are neglecting to make use of it. Millions walk the streets with no more protection against crippling polio than the thousands whose lives were destroyed or distorted by the epidemic of 1916.

The threat of polio has not been eliminated. The virus still stalks among us. If you have not taken Salk shots, you are still in danger.

The only way to have peace of mind is to get vaccinated NOW.

SURGERY AND THE ELDERLY

Within the past few years, three of the most famous living Americans have undergone surgery — President Eisenhower, the former Presidents Hoover and Truman. The ages of these men ran from 65 to 83. In each case, recovery was complete, and the patient resumed activity within a very short space of time.

This fact is cited in an article by Robert P. Goldman. And he uses it to point up the tremendous strides that American medicine has made in the surgical treatment of elderly people. He writes that patients aged 60 to 90 and beyond are undergoing surgery as a routine matter today — something that was virtually unheard of a generation ago. Patients who were refused surgery as bad risks when in their 60's are now being operated on safely in their 70's. And the mortality rate in operations on the aged is as low as 5 per cent, where a generation ago it was several times that figure.

Many medical advances are responsible. A new "light" anesthesia does not affect the lungs and heart. New instruments have eliminated other hazards. A vast increase in nutritional knowledge plays a vital constructive role in both the pre-operative and the post-operative periods. New drugs have all but wiped out pneumonia and other chest disorders.

The significance of this is impossible to exaggerate. We are living far longer than did our ancestors, and our descendants will live longer still. The proportion of senior citizens to the total population rises steadily.

"The Sun Must Not Sink!"

The Editor Speaks

VINCENT S. PARRILLO

Another school year has ended. And this year's graduates are finding the job market more competitive than did the graduating classes of prior years.

But this shouldn't be a cause of undue gloom. For there are some compelling facts about our economy that aren't apparent in current headlines — and they are cheerful facts.

President Keith Funston of the New York Stock Exchange listed four of them during a speech he made at a college commencement. First, our population is expected to increase by more than a third — 35 per cent — by 1977. Second, we now spend $9 billion a year for research and development to create a steady flow of new products and new jobs that serve to create new markets and thus raise living standards. Third, over the long-run our job opportunities are constantly expanding — within the next two decades there will probably be 28 million more jobs than existed at the end of World War II. Fourth, average family purchasing power, after taxes, is at an all-time high of about $5,700 and is expected to reach almost $7,500 by 1975.

Mr. Funston then added a warning note. Over the years we have reduced the incentives that result in material progress, through archaic, punitive taxation and in other ways. It is his belief that in the near future a needed change in this situation will come about. If so, the long-range American economy, to quote him, will most certainly be "... strong, hopeful and productive."

QUESTION BOX

WAYNE —

If the American dollar should depreciate as has the French Franc what would our money buy today?

Today the French Franc is worth only 1/84th of the value it had in 1918. If the dollar were only 1/84th of its 1918 value, a $100 suit of clothes would cost $8,400; a $100 social security check would buy only two pounds of hamburger; and a $100,000 life insurance policy would provide room and board for a widow for about a year.

Where does the word "moonshine" come from?

The word "moonshine" which we take to mean that liquor which is distilled illicitly, was given the name "moonshine" because it was made and moved for distribution mostly during the moonlight hours, to prevent detection. When talking amongst themselves the distillers, or "moonshiners" used this term as a code word to avoid talking about what they were actually manufacturing.

The priest, who served as an assistant at St. Nicholas R. C.

Answer to Cross Word Puzzle

Two men who hadn't seen one another in several years met on the street one day.

"How are you getting along?" asked one.

"Fine," said the other. "Except I'm having trouble with my wife."

"That's too bad; what seems to be the matter?"

"She seems to think money grows on trees, I guess. She's always pestering me for money. If it isn't a dollar for this, it's a dollar for that."

"What on earth does she do with all the money?"

His friend shook his head.

"To tell you the truth, I don't really know. I've never yet given her any."

The warden of a Midwest prison sent a note around to inmates asking for suggestions on the kind of party they'd recommend to celebrate his 25th anniversary. The prisoners all had the same idea—Open House.

A teacher telling his class of teenagers about the Old West said that Billy the Kid had killed 21 men before he was 21 years old.

A girl who had been listening open-mouthed asked, "What make of car did he drive?"

Okay, pardner, you'd better be off this earth by sundown!

THE EYES HAVE IT—London — To set off her emerald-green eyes, lovely Barbara Joyce, 23, picked a red rose from her London garden. Barbara thinks her eyes are her best feature and has insured them for $280,000, which should make the whole girl nearly as expensive as the national debt. Barbara stars on TV as the heroine of a mystery show.

PICTURE-WISE — Dots always are in the picture for Jack Narz — he's quizmaster of "Dotto," the game in which correct answers count toward forming a picture from connecting dots, with cash prizes. "Dotto" is a new Tuesday evening feature on the NBC-TV Network.

EPEE IN TEPEE — Robert Horton, who can expertly handle six-guns as the co-star of "Wagon Train" on the NBC-TV Network Wednesday nights, shows he's just as adept in swordplay. Horton uses his fencing both to keep in trim and to relax from his work before the cameras as Flint McCullough, frontier scout, in the full-hour dramas.

Youth Cooperates In Raising Birds For 1958 Upland Hunting Season

The State Division of Fish and Game, Department of Conservation and Economic Development, today announced 17,942 preasant chicks have been distributed to 129 youthful cooperators to raise in preparation for the 1958 upland hunting season next November.

The Division has continued to sponsor a program of youth participation in the rearing of game birds in New Jersey to augment the supply of the game farms. Day-old chicks are delivered to 4-H, Future Farmers of America and Junior Sportsmen cooperators to be reared until they are 17 weeks of age. The program is supervised by three wildlife managers, in cooperation with the 4-H Club agents, FFA leaders and sponsors of junior sportsmen clubs.

Under the new policy inaugurated this year on the Game Farms the chicks furnished the cooperators have been sexed, and 80 per cent or better are cocks. Also in line with the ne wpolicy of pheasant stocking inaugurated by the State Fish and Game Council birds will not be picked up for distribution until they are 17 weeks old and are fully mature when they can be liberatd just before the opening of the season.

The program is restricted to the rearing of pheasants and quail. Because southern New Jersey offers the best qual habita, quail rearing is restric'ed to that portion of the State. In the northern portion of the State rearing is restricted to the ring-neck pheasant. All chicks are hatched and delivered from the State Game Farms.

The Division of Fish and Game is aware of the need for participation of the youth of the country in order to maintain the natural growth of wildlife under proper management. Quail chick distribution is now being carried out.

Wendy stood at the window, watching the Stebbins boy in messenger uniform come pedalling down the street. Her freckled, turned-up nose, that Cliff had liked to kiss almost as much as her sweet eager young lips, pressed flatter against the pane, and she wondered idly whom the telegram was for.

Pretty soon, she thought, there'd be a girl replacing the Stebbins boy, because he'd be turning in that blue uniform for a khaki one. And thinking that, Cliff came strongly into her mind again, and the cold panic swept over her. Her slender hand went to the front of the soft blue sweater that was just a little loose on her budding figure, and her fingers pressed in, squeezing the wedding ring that hung under there from her suddenly aching throat.

Dear God, she thought, almost in prayer, what will I do? Every night, for the long hours that she lay awake, tossing, turning, tormented, it was a prayer.

"Wendy!" That was her mother, calling down from the attic. "Wendy, isn't it about time you telephoned the caterers?"

Wendy's knees went weak and she sank slowly down on the window seat, her fingers gripping the cushioned edge until they felt the wood beneath. It was so close, then, to the 30th, and she still hadn't decided what to do.

She touched the wedding ring between her small young breasts again. Cliff's ring. Cliff . . . Private Gariton . . . her husband. And nobody knew. Not even her mother. Especially not her mother, who at the moment was getting everything ready for the wedding she had arranged. For the 30th. Between Wendy and Henry Lathrop.

How different it might have been, Wendy thought, if she had ever been able to confide in her mother. But there was a self-sufficiency, a preoccupation with her own affairs, a take-it-for-granted attitude in Ethel Lewis . . . about her marriage, even her husband and Wendy . . . that made her almost a stranger. At least unapproachable. Wendy's father felt it, too; when he was not at the office, he was in the garden or the basement greenhouse.

The most beautifully run, and the coldest house in town. Yet, there was nothing of family about the Lewises; and that was one of the reasons, Wendy knew, why she had wanted Cliff so much and had been willing to marry him even though he was leaving at once for overseas; the reason, too, that her mother knew nothing about it now. It had been as much not knowing how to tell as being afraid; and now it was too late.

If only Cliff were home, it would be so easy; she wouldn't be afraid of anything or anyone. But she hadn't even heard from him in weeks. His last word had been out on her doorstep, his murmured, "I'm going so far away, my darling; yet you'll be so near, because I love you so." Words that told her everything, yet nothing.

Right out on her very doorstep . . . where the Stebbins boy was reaching for the doorbell now.

And then Wendy was there, reaching for the yellow envelope. "I'll sign for it, Tommy. Mother's in the attic and Dad's out."

"Oh, it's for you, Miss Lewis." Wendy's first thought was that this was a fine way to receive one's own telegram . . . in sweater and slacks and flat shoes . . . and that she wished she could hurry up and be known as Mrs. Gariton instead of Miss Lewis. Then the funny little pricklings began in her heart . . .

The words had to hit, and dig into her brain before they finally got in there and staved, burning, searing . . . "Regret to inform . . . Clifton Gariton missing in action."

I'm Wendy Gariton, she kept saying over and over. I'm Cliff's wife. I've got to take it the way he wanted. I was afraid to tell I was married, but I'm brave enough to take this. Over and over, but it didn't mean a thing because all the fine thoughts came from a huddled little heap on the window seat, and stronger than brave thoughts is the sound of a breaking heart.

There seemed to be hours of dull, aching misery in that darkened room, until Wendy heard the lamp switch on and felt a hand on her trembling shoulder, and heard her mother say, "Heavens, child, what's wrong?" And then there was the crumpling sound of the telegram being picked up and read.

"Cliff Gariton? Oh, what a shame! But, Wendy . . . Wendy, why should this come to you?"

Nothing mattered now. Nothing in the world could even matter. And Wendy lifted her head and looked at her mother and said very softly, "Because I'm on his identification tag. Mother. I was Cliff's wife."

For the moment Ethel Lewis could only stare, and then she dropped to Wendy's side and held her tightly. "Oh my darling, why didn't you tell me? Why did you let me make you miserable with Henry Lathrop?"

Something came into Ethel Lewis' face then . . . something bleak and old yet somehow rich and understanding. "You were afraid to tell me, weren't you, darling? You've never been able to tell me anything, you and your father. Jim's not been able to tell me anything, either, for a long time."

She sighed and smiled a little sadly. "You didn't know, dear, that my own marriage was like yours. It was war and everybody said don't, but we did. I was so young, like you, and your father had hair like Cliff's and the same grin. I guess because I seem to forget that it was such a happy marriage and that I wouldn't have wanted one that was any different. I never told you and I keep forgetting to tell Jim. I've been too long running things."

"It's all right, Mother," Wendy said quietly, glad that the tears were drying now on her cheeks. "It couldn't have done any good, my knowing or your being different. I've had what I wanted." And nothing can take it away, she thought fiercely; his arms are around me forever, I'll never stop feeling his kiss, hearing his voice . . .

Then she saw her mother getting up and going to the door, and taking something in and turning around with a queer hopeful smile on her lips. "A telegram for you, dear."

"Open it, Mother." What did it matter? A confirmation, no doubt.

"I don't think I have to, but . . ." She opened it then, and read it, and said what her eyes already showed, that Cliff had been found and was slightly wounded and was coming home.

And then Wendy was crying again, but with a happiness that filled her heart to bursting and brought the room alive and the house and the whole world! Oh, darling, darling, you're coming back to me! Hurry, hurry! "I'm so glad," her mother was saying. "I'm awfully glad. And I'm glad for the other telegram, too. For my sake."

She looked puzzled around as if seeking someone, and all the grayness and indifference and self-sufficiency went out of her face, and she said in a breathless, almost girlish voice, "Where's your father, dear? I want to see him."

"What about, Mother?"

"Oh, nothing," Ethel Lewis said shyly. "I just want to see him, look at him. I haven't really looked at Jim for a long time."

BRADDOCK'S DEFEAT

Major General Edward Braddock could be proud of his army as it crossed the Monongahela River on the morning of July 9, 1755. He had with him such famous regiments as the Coldstream Guards, dressed as for parade in their scarlet and gold uniforms, but these troops he regarded with contempt. Yet for all his dislike of colonials, Braddock had one of them as an aide on his staff, a young man of 23 named George Washington, whose ability Braddock had been quick to recognize.

The French had built Fort Duquesne on a commanding spot at the junction of the Monongahela and Allegheny Rivers, the present site of Pittsburgh. Braddock, commander of British forces in America, set out to capture this strategic fort. He assembled his force at Fort Cumberland, now Cumberland, Maryland, and started out during the first week of June on the march through the wilderness.

Hundreds of axmen had been sent ahead to cut a road. The march was rough, but with springtime, the woods in full bloom, Braddock's men were gay. Over the hills, across the streams and through the timber the troops marched with banners flying, bands playing, while the forest echoed their shouts and music.

Early on July 9, 1755 Braddock's men forded the Monongahela and moved slowly on as the axmen ahead cut a path through the dark forest. They were only eight miles from Fort Duquesne when shots rang out and men began to fall. The British veterans wheeled into line and returned the fire, but they could see little to shoot at, only puffs of smoke from French and Indian muskets hidden in the woods.

Braddock's men fired volley after volley with little effort on their invisible enemy. Brave men thought they were, they became confused and huddled on the 12-foot road shut in by a forest resounding with war cries while the bullets whizzed into their ranks like hail. The colonial troops tried to fight back Indian fashion. But Braddock would not let them. He galloped back and forth like a madman, trying to get his troops into battle lines and striking with his sword at men who tried to fight from behind trees.

Four horses were killed under Braddock before he, too, was shot down and fatally wounded. Now, after three hours of battle, with two thirds of their numbers cut down, the remainder of Braddock's army hastily retreated, leaving the dead and wounded along the path they had marched so gaily a few hours before. Most of Braddock's officers had fallen. George Washington survived as by a miracle, with two horses shot under him.

General Braddock was buried in the middle of the forest road by his fleeing men, and to keep the spot from being found by the Indians, the retreating army—men, horses, and wagons—passed over his grave, flattening it into the rutted forest soil.

Braddock's defeat left the border open to a bloody Indian war for several years. But it also taught the colonies that Americans could be equal in battle to the best British regulars. This lesson was to prove valuable twenty years later when the struggle for independence began.
