SUBURBAN

There has been considerable eye-brow raising among Haledon residents since former mayor, Ernest Ford, was named police-magistrate clerk. Most people are wondering whether "Hap" needs the prestige or the salary. Will it make Ford look good as a freeholder candidate.

Rumors in Fair Lawn seem to point to a Fairview widow as the person responsible for "blowing the whistle" on the boys under indictment.

* * * *

It is now official that Totowa Mayor "Joe" Ryan will be a Democratic candidate for Passaic County Freeholder. Most will remember you read it here first. Ryan is an "ideal" candidate having poise, personality and ability.

* * * *

We hear former Haledon Mayor Charles Cona is seeking to break away from the GOP faction he is affiliated with in the borough. It seems there are too many chiefs and not enough indians in the group. Cona is too good a man to be lost in a shuffle of this kind.

* * * *

"Joe" Muccio's leadership in West Paterson was very much in evidence last week when his three organization candidates were elected to school board seats by wide margins.

* * * *

As expected, the Totowa Borough school budget was knocked down by voters. It was "top heavy" with administrative expenses and several other items which weren't "too judiciously" included.

* * * *

In Hawthorne, the power wielded by Ray Rhodes was manifest when virtually unknown candidates were elected to school board posts.

* * * *

It is reported that Ted Brohl's defeat in the West Paterson school board race removes the last vestige of Ben Rabin's attempts to gain a foothold in the borough.

* * * *

Fran Molendyke's amazing show of popularity and strength in running "high man" for the Haledon school board may result in her being named president of the board. A woman of many capabilities, she would reflect great credit to the board and borough if she were elevated.

Humanity First

Practicing doctors in Russia are extremely poorly paid—about $800 a month. The big rewards go to scientists who devote themselves to research. In other words, human life in Russia is cheap, and medical standards and policy reflect that belief.

We are about to embark on a gigantic weapons program, out of sheer necessity. Vast scientific resources will have to be devoted to it. But this will not be done at the expense of the individual's health — and it will not be done by turning our hospitals and other medical institutions into impersonal assembly lines. That symbolizes the difference between our society and the Soviet society.

1958 Summit Conference Is A Challenge For U. S.

In higher echelons of leadership, virtually all Western world powers remain skeptical that East-West relations can be improved by a 1958 summit conference. The reasons the Russians proposed such a parley are clear. The Soviet Union has achieved prestige as a result of launching of sputniks and—for the U.S.S.R. — the time is right. The communists can negotiate from a position of strength. From the Western point of view it would be good to delay a conference until the U. S. has had time to awe the world with a demonstration of its scientific-military genius.

However, governments of the West, confronted with political realities which the Soviet dictatorship doesn't have, may not be able to wait. Leaders of the British Conservative party who have taken a dim view of a meeting have started leaning toward such a conference later this year — in the wake of British public opinion polls which show top-level East-West talks favored by an overwhelming majority. In one poll, by the London Daily Express, 83 per cent of Britishers questioned thought the Soviet invitation to a summit conference should be accepted.

The position of the United States, as stated by President Eisenhower, is that a summit conference will be all right, and may be desirable, if the U.S.S.R. agrees to preliminary preparation via diplomatic conversations.

The guess of many Western diplomats is that a summit conference will take place this summer — and that its accomplishments will lie somewhere between the hopes of its ardent advocates and the pessimism of its critics.

The Editor Speaks

VINCENT S. PARRILLO

Sometimes when you hear of things going on among young people today you wonder if they learn anything at all in school. Not that teachers are not doing a good job, but with a few lax ones and the natural laziness of the average student, education faces a real challenge.

Last week a close friend of ours, a professor at a teachers' college, came to call and the chit chat got around to high school graduates and the amount of knowledge they soak up in four years. He told a story that makes me wonder.

He asked 80 freshmen preparing to become teachers to define "capitalism". Almost all of them, he found, "not only called capitalism a form of government, but they thought it an evil and dangerous form of government."

One student said: "Capitalism is more on the dictator type of government." Another said: "Capitalism is the extreme measures that are taken by a group, country, or even a single person . . . It can be dangerous if allowed to spread into the wrong hands." Another said: "I am sure there are many places where capitalism is going on at the present time, and if this practice should ever become nationwide, the country is in for a lot of trouble." Still another said: "Capitalism . . . is on the order of communism . . ."

It would be hard to find more horrible examples of ignorance. And they came, don't forget, from college students who want to become teachers and guide the minds of children. Something is wrong with American education — and it's something that can't be cured by multi-million dollar school plants.

Politics

—by O JAY

The opinions expressed in this column are exclusively those of the writer and do not necessarily reflect the policy and opinion of The Chronicle.

Local professional politicians are chewing aspirin by the pound in the light of developments. The GOP, with a "no dual job" ruling, have lost several strong vote-getters. In certain areas there is resistance to the edict, spelling further intra-party strife. The Democrats face a "too many chiefs" problem, with everyone seeking office.

JOSEPH A. ABBOTT

blood. So it looks like an early spring.

In the congressional race, it will be incumbent Gordon Canfield and Joseph Abbott. Despite the economic downturn, renewed Democratic strength through added patronage and whatever other reasons may be advanced, Canfield will be extremely difficult to unseat. Abbott is as good a Democratic candidate as can be found! Though he is a two-time loser in the quest for a freeholder berth, Joe gave excellent account of himself and would have won the first time except for skulduggery on the part of his own party members. Like each of us, Joe has certain people who don't like him but he does have a legion of friends and devoted workers.

Canfield is also a man with scarcely anyone disliking him. He has been instrumental in doing a multitude of little things for a lot of little people who know no other congressman but Gordon Canfield. Though his party is in disrepute locally, statewide and nationally, Canfield may be able to escape the Democratic onslaught because he has never been involved in a major party line dispute.

OUTLOOK — The first signs of the business upturn predicted by President Eisenhower, still are being awaited. Current business figures suggest the trend still is downward.

The business survey committee of the National Association of Purchasing Agents reported business got off to a "plodding start" in January. Only 12 per cent of those polled reported improvement over December in production figures. Forty per cent said there was no change. Forty-eight per cent reported a January dip from December production levels. This constituted the largest number telling of output declines in any month since before World War II. Also, 48 per cent reported a dip in new orders — the largest number so reporting since 1949. Fifty-three per cent told of shrinking employment. However, the report said: "A number of our members believe we are near the bottom. They expect a definite upturn this year."

AID TO EDUCATION— Business was urged to make more tax-deductible contributions to education and to take more active interest in school affairs. This advice was given by magazine publisher Roy E. Larsen, former chairman of the National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools. He said: "The fact is that, in terms of aims and achievement, we have a growing educational deficit, both of quantity and quality. He warned against a "soft curriculum", denouncing "the large number of elective courses which permits so many students to elect themselves right out of a solid education." He also urged business men serve on school boards and citizens' committees and act as supplementary teachers.

"Thelma, Let's Get The Heart — We Can Divide The Candy!"

ENROUTE TO WASHINGTON AFTER MOSCOW MEETING — New York — U. S. Ambassador to Moscow Llewellyn E. S. recent proposal for a summit meeting.

The gyrations of rock and roll may soon be replaced by novelty tunes, according to bandleader Sammy Kaye. Sammy, who has frequently defended rock and rollers, feels teen-agers are growing tired of the monotonous rhythms. "We are on the threshold of an era of novelty songs," claims Sammy. "Novelty tunes," says Sammy, "will be a welcome relief from rock and roll and will appeal to the American teen-agers."

America's favorite game can now be played via television, five-days a week, when WABD presents "Bingo-At-Home" starting Monday, February 17. Big prizes will be awarded to the tune of $10,000 per week.

It is played with the familiar 25 boxes, five across and five down. The card is made up in the following way: you take a phone number and write the digits in a row, under the five letters of the word BINGO. You then complete the rest of the boxes with consecutive digits.

We ran across the following article in one of the national magazines and considered it worthy of reprinting. Many of you may not have seen it and will get an opportunity to ponder the complex mathematical problem it presents. If you can come up with an answer, we'll be happy to publish it and see that your solution gets to the proper authorities.

Here it is:

"As a reward for hardships he will undergo, the prospective space traveler many enjoy the bonus of an extra-long life.

According to Einstein's Special Theory of Relativity, motion causes space and time to contract. This creates the "twin brother paradox": If one twin spends time space voyaging, at speeds approaching that of light, he will find himself biologically younger than his stay-at-home twin when he returns.

So argue the mathematicians; some biologists disagree on the ground that physical aging is independent of motion. To settle the argument actual inter-planetary flight — both Russian and U. S. scientists have considered sending an atomic clock up in an 18,000-mph earth-circling satellite to see if it "ticks" slower than a terrestrial atomic clock.

While the theoreticians debate the issue, an anonymous limerick writer offers his own version of the problem:

There was once a twin brother named Bright.
Who could travel much faster than light,
He departed one day, in a relative way,
And came home on the previous night.

REUNION with DESTINY

By WALTER LIVINGSTON

The bridge loomed before June Aansom and she stopped. The town had not changed, except in small ways, and neither had the bridge. It was the same.

The train tracks lay beneath. Near the bend, the signal tower blinked green. The River flowed lazily. Overhead stars twinkled. The moon was low and full, spraying silver upon the water. Even the night was the same — the same kind of clear, bright night as that last one when she'd told Jim she was going away.

A young couple, arm in arm, crossed the bridge, their feet loud on the boarding, their voices soft. She did not know them. The boy was saying they would get wood for a fire; they would have a beach-roast. They moved on past her. She remembered the beach-roasts she and Jim used to have. If it was not too late they would have them again.

She crossed the bridge. She sat at the top of the steps that led down to the river and lit a cigarette. She sat there looking out, the way she used to; only now she was alone. The boat club where she and Jim had lodged their canoe lay silhouetted off shore. Row-boats and launches tied-up, scarcely moved on the quiet water.

How peaceful it was. How good to be home! After the things she'd seen, been part of, running like a hunted rabbit before the olive-green storm; machines rumbling; fire spitting from the sky; people crying, falling — and she crying Jim's name, always his.

She snapped her mind shut against these thoughts which were no more. She was home. Here there was peace, safety. They could not reach her here. She sighed, thankfully. The cigarette smoke curled away. Through the mirror of the years she saw now how wrong she'd been. Their last night, here at the bridge where they were together so often, returned, vividly.

She had told Jim, that night, of the increasing restlessness she'd known within herself. She had used her painting as a sword. She could never be a good painter sticking here in Ludlow. She must be free, for awhile, to see the world, to grow. She loved him; there would never be anyone else. She'd come back soon.

She'd seen the hurt, agonized wonder in his eyes as he had tried to understand what she told herself she understood so well. That look and his voice had remained with her throughout the four years. "The marriage will wait," he'd said, simply, "until you come home."

So, loving him more than she ever had for his quiet understanding, she had taken the money her mother had left her, not much, and gone abroad. To France and then Holland to study. And she knew, after the first two years, that she should go home; the search for something which was not for her was ended. The Adventure was spent. But she stayed on, out of hope and chiefly pride, and she wrote less frequently to him for she knew now she would never be a fine painter, and she didn't want him to know.

Then the storm had struck and she had run, with the others. Only she was luckier than they. She had a home to go to, someone waiting . . .

Footsteps sounded below. A man slim and tall and hatless appeared out of the night. He was carrying a paddle in one hand and as he approached closer and moonlight touched the dark head and fine face she saw with beating heart that it was Jim.

He stood there, rigid with surprise.

She said: "Hello, Jim."

"June—" His voice was very low; he came up to her. Then he did a strange thing. He held out his hand. She took it. It was strange, shaking hands with Jim.

"When did you get home?" he asked.

"This afternoon."

"Good to be back?"

"Yes. I was going to surprise you, tomorrow. This is better."

There was a pause. She thought: how straight and tall and fine he is. What a fool I was! She took his hand and sat down; he sat next to her.

"How's your work, June?"

"I'll never be a Mary Cassatt."

They laughed.

They looked out over the water. She guessed he was thinking the same as she. That it was right they should meet again here where they had so often met before. Where they had dreamed their dreams.

"Tell me, where all have you been? You weren't caught in that over there."

She didn't want to talk about that. "First tell me about you. Married and a father and all that, by now?" Her tone, was it sufficiently light?

"No. I've been busy, with other things."

A wave of relief passed over her. "Canoeing, for instance?" She smiled. "And you wrote of putting about planes."

He nodded. "More of a future in aviation. After you went away—" He stopped, abruptly. "Why didn't you write, June? What happened that you didn't write?"

"Nothing, Jim. Nothing's changed."

The music of a night boat coming up river reached to them. They listened and remembered. She said, "Remember the time we went to Rock Mountain and it rained?"

"We got drenched and didn't care."

"It was cold. We spent the entire return-trip dancing. We said we wouldn't catch cold if we kept moving."

"We just wanted to be close." There was a sadness in his voice, as if at something lost. "We can go again," she said.

Their eyes were locked and she knew, reading behind his, their hearts were too, tightly, ever as before. He bent and kissed her, hard and full; but his lips lifted too quickly, it seemed, off hers and she felt again that strangeness of him.

They sat there, hands locked. A silence lay between them, a silence ticking off the years. The strangeness of him would pass. Her return was abrupt, a shock. She would make easy the spanning of the years. "We're young," she thought; "thank God, we're young and safe! I'll spend the rest of my life making those lost years up to him."

He said: "I must go now." He stood.

She rose to go with him.

"No," he said. "Please. I'd rather go alone." He handed her the canoe paddle. "You take it. I won't have much use for it till I get back."

"Back, Jim?"

"I leave in the morning. When you didn't write, I heard nothing . . . I volunteered."

She fought off the nausea that swept over her. "You'll be back in a year. There are — leaves. And I can go visit you."

"This is furlough." His voice was low, flat. "The last. We leave for Europe next week. I'm with the Canadians, flying."

They stood there looking at each other, not speaking because there was so much to say that was useless to be spoken now. He nodded toward the paddle. "You know where the locker is. The same one. The key is in the same place." He turned swiftly away.

"Jim!" she cried out. "Jim!" Trembling, she looked out over the river. The boat was a twinkle of lights lost in the starry horizon.

This Week In AMERICAN HISTORY

BY WILLIAM BRODIE

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

On the morning of February 12, 1809 Tom Lincoln's wife, Nancy Hanks Lincoln, gave birth to a boy baby in their little log cabin a couple of miles from Hodgenville, Kentucky. They named the baby Abraham. He was their second child, but first son.

Thomas and Nancy Lincoln were frontier folk, poor and illiterate, originally from Virginia. By trade Tom was a carpenter, but by choice he was a restless farmer. On Nolin Creek, where Abe was born, the land was rocky and unfruitful. Two years after Abe's birth his father tried another place at Knob Creek. Again he failed.

In 1816 Tom Lincoln moved his family north across the Ohio River into the Indiana wilderness. During the first winter the family lived in a crude lean-to made of brush and poles, with one side open to the weather. In October of 1818 Nancy Hanks Lincoln took sick with fever and died, a pioneer woman who had lived bravely to the end of her endurance. Her husband used his carpenter skill to fashion her coffin out of green lumber.

For a year Abe's sister, Sarah, but two years older than he, kept house for the forlorn family. Then on December 2, 1819 Tom Lincoln took another wife, Sarah Bush Johnston, a widow with three children. She was a kind and gentle woman with a cheerful nature. She brought with her household conveniences hitherto unknown to the Lincoln family. Young Abe was soon to adore his stepmother. When Lincoln as a man said, "God bless my mother. All that I am or ever hope to be, I owe to her," he was speaking of his stepmother.

Seven year old Abe was put to work at once with an axe in his hands when his family moved to Indiana. Those were "pretty pinching times" as he recalled. He was kept hard at work as he grew up, clearing land and cutting timber. And with fencing, plowing, planting, and harvesting there was little time for formal schooling. Somehow, with no more than a year's schooling, and encouraged by his stepmother, he learned to read, write and cipher. Late into the winter nights he sat up reading the few books within reach. By the light of the fireplace he taught himself elementary mathematics, grammar, history, and surveying.

And so he grew up, working, studying, and also taking part in the fun and frolic of the countryside. Abe liked to mingle with people, to talk and swap stories, to compete in wrestling and weight-lifting, at which he became a local champion. At the age of 19 he made a flatboat trip to New Orleans and came in first serious contact with slavery. He vowed that if he ever had the chance to "hit" slavery, he would "hit it hard."

In 1830 the Lincoln family moved to Illinois, near Decatur. Abe was now 21. He went along with his folks to help them move and establish their new homestead. That done, he struck out on his own.

Now Abe Lincoln stood six feet, four inches tall, long of leg and arm, with tousled black hair over grey eyes in a gaunt, craggy face that already looked sad and brooding in repose. He was an awkward backwoodsman, but filled with a great restless yearning to do something big and worthwhile in the world. Besides the clothing he wore he had nothing but his strong body, a mind to match it, and a brave and generous soul. This was the roster of his possessions in his young manhood as he started out on the rugged road that was to carry him to the Presidency of the United States and to world immortality.
