MIXED LINE-UP — At her Kennels, near Petworth (Sussex), Mrs. M. Hazelman breeds dogs of all shapes and sizes, but every one an aristocrat. Several champions have been produced at these kennels, appropriately called The Variety Kennel. Now being brought up there is yet another "breed" a young lamb named "Daisy May" which was one of triplets born on a nearby farm. After being abandoned by its mother, the lamb was given to Mrs. Hazleman and is now quite "at home" with the dogs.

The Navy's A3J-1, North American Carrier Based Twin-Jet Aircraft, will provide the fleet with an all-weather, carrier-based attack weapon system capable of delivering nuclear weapons on difficult targets at supersonic speeds.

Augusta is a former president of the Journeyman Barbers, Local 341, former president of the Master Barbers and Beauticians of America, Chapter 855, and former vice president of the New Jersey State Association of Barbers and Beauticians.

August said at the meeting that he would try to bring to the attention of the ward's voters the current alderman's policy of "impartial representation."

A WORKING HOLIDAY — Schoolboys on holiday form the crew of this mechanical planter in operation planting spring cabbages on an English farm. As the boys have not had sufficient experience to keep up with the machine, other children follow behind to plant any missed. The youngsters are from various schools and colleges in the district. During their school holidays they lend a hand on the land. Their help is very useful at that busy time of the year and they also earn themselves some welcome pocket money.

West Paterson First Aid Squad Acquires Ground

The Borough of West Paterson has donated a plot of ground measuring 64 by 244 feet to the First Aid Squad. Mayor Alfred Baumann presented the deed to Joseph Neal, president of the squad. The squad plans to erect its headquarters on the plot some time next year.

The First Aid Squad requested permission to erect a 40-foot pole on the property. On top of the pole they want to install a siren to summon squad members in emergencies. Permission to erect the pole was granted providing the pole is a new one, as the borough will not permit the erection of a siren on an old pole.

The borough further cooperates by assuming the cost of the pole and its installation, plus the monthly cost of $7.50 for wiring the siren to the Little Falls Post station radio headquarters.

Garden State Parkway Loses Farm Markets

The experimental of permitting farm markets in the service areas of the Garden State Parkway has come to an end. The markets were closed this week. The basis for the closing of the markets was unfavorable reaction of the public. Although some liked the idea most tourists resented the idea of farm markets on the scenic highway.

Commissioner White gave special credit to the New Jersey State Federation of Women's Clubs for reporting the "interest and concern" of its members in the experiment. The closing of the markets followed a request for such action from the statewide women's organization.

Jewelry Store Blaze Quickly Extinguished

The Plaza Jewelry store at 111 Plaza Road was on fire this past week. The damage was not extensive. Some articles on top of a desk in the rear of the store were damaged, and the wall next to the desk will need redecorating.

John Ferraro, owner of the store apparently reported to police the cause of the fire. It wasn't the glittering jewels which started the fire. Neither was it the malfunction of the heating unit. Neither was it the static electricity in the cat's fur. What was it? It was merely a lit cigarette which fell from a ash tray into a pile of papers.

All fire companies of the boroughs were on the job and under the direction of Deputy Fire Chief Arch Brown.

Mountain Fire Threatens State College Area

Wayne Township and North Haledon Fire Companies had a rough time extinguishing brush fire on the mountain in the vicinity of State Teachers College.

The fire was eventually put out and no great damage resulted with the exception of losing a number of trees in the area.

At this time of the year many residents are burning their leaves with the result that police telephones are loaded with calls reporting smoke. Another cause of many calls was the burning of felled trees off Laauwe Avenue, by a developer. He has a permit from the fire department.

Revaluation of Homes Started in Wayne

The big job of revaluating all property in Wayne Township has begun. Although Wayne residents are as a whole very hospitable, it is unlikely that they will be enthusiastic about the visit by the appraisers. Many have done considerable work inside their homes and the visit of the appraisers may increase their taxes.

The appraiser will be required to enter every home to appraise its value. Each appraiser will carry proper credentials, signed by the board with the township seal. The home owner is advised to examine the credentials before letting anyone inside. Fakes may take advantage of the situation.

Appraisers will not enter homes where the children alone are at home. Residents are asked to contact the board and make arrangement when they will be at home for the appraiser to do his work.

RHODESIAN POLICE MEET STRANGE AFRICAN TRIBE

A strange African tribe who have had no contact with white people were encountered by Rhodesian police in the Zambesi Valley, when they met up with two members of the tribe.

They are the Vadoma people, and only five families are left, living in the bush. The small group has no chief. They keep away from other Africans who lives in native reserves. They are afraid the other Africans may tell the Europeans about them, who might arrest them. Then they would have to live in the reserves and pay taxes. They may not, according to their laws marry outside their clan.

"MONKEY BUSINESSES" IN INDIA THREATENED

India fears it may lose the lucrative monkey business, which amounts to $5,000,000 a year, unless new restrictions on the export of monkeys are relaxed.

American buyers have asked the New Delhi government to make it easier to obtain rhesus monkeys needed for polio vaccine tests. The restrictions now ban export of monkeys weighing less than six pounds.

YOUR HOME

by LEWIS & ELEANOR BOWMAN

To Connect The New Addition To Your House

DO you have to add a few rooms to your house? Or are you going to build the garage that you have been waiting to do? Sometimes, these additions present problems which are hard to solve. We have had many remodeling jobs. Families increase, and extra rooms are a necessity. Clients often like the location of their houses and like their neighborhood, and do not wish to sell and buy a larger house, perhaps in another section. So additions have to be made.

The photograph shows an archway to the garden of the Pierce Nichols' house in Salem, Massachusetts. This house is a large one, but the same idea could be used in a house of any size. The archway would be the path to the rear of the house, where your garden would be. It could connect additional rooms above and a garage below. Doors could be placed on both sides, making access to the garage convenient and under shelter.

The Essex Institute, Salem, Mass.

These passages are always cool, creating a draft of air—hence, "breezeway," in modern parlance. It is a good place for children to play, and a place to keep their bicycles, wagons and toys. It's a good place, too, for sleds and skis and all the winter sports equipment which takes so much room.

These covered paths were used in various ways, a century or more ago. In the country, they connected auxiliary buildings used for chopped wood or wagon sheds. We have seen them in the towns, particularly along the eastern seacoast, where there were walks to the rear of the house, the area over them being part of the second floor of the building.

There are famous houses in old New Orleans which have these walks from the street, through to a patio in the rear. The patios have walls around them, or other buildings, usually for servants. Trees are planted and flowers grown in tubs, making the enclosures into delightful places to sit. They are cool, for the sun only reaches them at noon for a few hours. Some of these are now occupied by well-known restaurants.

This idea has been in use in Europe for centuries, and is as good today as then. You could use it in your own house. Ask your architect about it for your new addition.

LIGHT FROM ADVERTISING

An American electric committee recently visited Russia. One of its members, Edwin Vennard, a top official of the Edison Electric Institute, has reported on what the committee found.

Russia's electric power plants and related installations are good, he says, and there has been notable expansion in late years. However, he also says: "The Soviets have one tremendous obstacle to surmount. They are running out of consumers."

How can this be in a nation of more than 200 million people? It is explained thus: "Russian homes which have electricity have only a single bulb hanging on a wire in the center of the room, much the same as was the case in the United States 30 or 35 years ago.

"This single bulb represents the extent electric energy is consumed by the average home owner in Russia."

Mr. Vennard was asked by a Russian how the problem of stimulating demand was solved in the United States. Mr. Vennard answered that it was largely a matter of advertising. To that the Russian said — "Oh propaganda". And Mr. Vennard let it go at that.

This little true story pretty well demonstrates the difference in living standards under communism as compared to capitalism.

EVERYBODY'S

The labor unions, naturally and properly are deeply interested in electing to office people who share their views and their legislative aims. They work on behalf of such candidates on a day-in-day-out, year-in-year-year-out basis, all the way from the grass roots to Washington, D. C. The AFL-CIO Political Committee is an outstanding example of this kind of labor activity.

Business groups also are deeply interested in electing to office people who share their views and their legislative aims. But this interest, up to now, has been insufficiently reflected in action. For the most part, businessmen have kept aloof from politics — to their loss and peril.

Of late, happily, a number of business organizations and leaders have been commenting on this failure and have been issuing calls to action. For example, Rowland Jones, Jr., head of the American Retail Federation, says: "Businessmen have long neglected their responsibility in the arena of political affairs. As a result, legislation and government administrative actions have increasingly throttled business and damaged our economy. There is no remedy but for businessmen to take a direct and active part in politics." To take another example, the president of Gulf Oil Company has called on business to organize a "matching force" against labor's political work.

The Editor Speaks

VINCENT S. PARRILLO

Did you ever notice how much of life is contained in those little "personal" notices that appear so inconspicuously in your newspaper, stuck away among the classified ads or in some remote corner where they are hardly noticed?

They are, of course, more multifarious in the big city papers, but I suppose every town has its "personals", just as every town has its joys and its sorrows.

I have before me a New York City newspaper, in which the personals are called "Public Notices", although it seems to me that they might better be called "private notices".

The first one reads, "Here for August, too. Please write! In 18 years the worst separation. PRETEND." Just imagine all the material a fiction writer could get out of this ad.

A fellow in New Jersey advertises that he performs all kinds of marriages — civil, church and whatever other kind there may be. He is open until five o'clock every evening. After five ring night bell.

But if you have a nervous breakdown from your business, you may first want to go to a rest home. That, too, is taken care of in these "Public Notices". A Long Island convalescent home advertises its "distinctive retreat" and will send you a brochure.

You may wonder where to go on your honeymoon. There is a place with a "private ocean beach" that will accommodate you for $60 or $70 a week.

If you are not satisfied with your popularity as a guest or a host you may "Learn To Swim" or "Learn Popular Piano."

Incidentally, I see where they have discovered the footprint of 175,000,000 year old Chirotherinum. The Chirotherinum was a beast similar to the Dinosaur, which was about 90 feet long and weighed in the neighborhood of 40 tons. The way she hollered I thought my wife had discovered a Chirotherinum in the bathroom. But when I rushed in, I found it was only a spider.

Social Security Benefits To Be Higher Beginning With January, 1958

Social security benefits are intended to replace in part loss of income brought about by the death, disability, or old-age retirement of the worker. Obviously, social security benefits are affected by changes in the national economy. Since the last benefit increase was put into effect in 1954, wages have increased by about 12 per cent and prices by eight per cent. Congress felt that adjustments in the benefit scale were in order and voted an across-the-board increase in the amendments which the President signed into law on August 28, 1958. These benefits become effective at the beginning of 1959, and will be included in all benefit checks for January which will reach beneficiaries early in February. As I said in the first article in this series, it is not necessary to visit your social security office to apply for these increases. They will be made automatically.

The benefit increase for retired workers amount to about 7 per cent over the levels provided in the old law, with a minimum increase of $3.00 in the benefits payable to a retired worker who came on the rolls at or after age 65. Slightly smaller increases will be shown on the benefit checks of retired women workers who elected to retire at age 62 or at any age thereafter before reaching age 65. Proportionate increases will be made in benefits paid to beneficiaries who are the dependents or survivors of retired or deceased workers.

For retired male workers now getting benefit payments, the monthly payments, beginning with the payment for January, will range from $33 to $116, as compared with $30 to $108.50 under the old law. For women workers now getting retirement benefits, the increased checks will range from $26.40 to $116 per month. This slightly lower minimum benefit is due to the fact that some women chose to retire before age 65.

Another change in the law will make possible larger maximum benefit payments for many people coming on the benefit rolls in the future. This will be due to the change in the so-called "earnings base" on which payments are figured. Right now, only earnings up to a total of $4,200 in a year can be credited to a worker's social security account; beginning with 1959, earnings up to $4,800 in a year will be credited to a social security account. The largest monthly benefit to a retired worker with average yearly earnings of $4,800 will be $127. However, this maximum benefit cannot be reached for many years.

Along with the increase in benefits will come an increase in social security taxes. Beginning with January, employed persons will have one-fourth of one percent additional taken out of their pay; the tax rate will be two and one-half per cent each for employee and employer.

LOCOMOTIVE ON FIRE

An engineer brought his burning diesel locomotive up to Pompton Lakes to be extinguished Thursday morning.

Having noticed the blaze in Hawthorne, William Pugh, the engineer, kept his Susquehanna train going until he reached this borough. There he summoned volunteers who responded with three trucks and smothered the blaze with chemicals.

The train was towed away a few hours later.

One didn't have license in his possession; two for passing thru red lights; and four for not stopping at stop streets.

JARRING DISCOVERY — Silver Spring, Md. — Getting the feel of the past, 6-year-old Despina Theoharis examines a giant, shell-encrusted jar which her Grandmother brought back from her native home on the Greek Island of Samos. Mrs. Palpologos took the jar to the Smithsonian Institute in nearby Washington, D.C. An expert there told her the "souvenir" was actually an ancient wine jug which the Greeks called Amphora, and probably dated back to 300 B.C.

In the comedy episode, Goetz offers his friend a role in a film which turns out to be "A Walk-On for George."

She Supported Three Children By Making and Selling Hats

By ANNE HEYWOOD

ASTER bonnets always remind me of Miss Jenks, a little old lady who lived in my home town.

Miss Jenks (that wasn't really her name) came to this country as a penniless immigrant. She got a job in a big hat factory in Connecticut, back in the days when hours were horribly long and the pay was very small.

But Miss Jenks was delighted to have the opportunity of making a living, and she worked very hard. Eventually she met another hat-maker, and married him. She stayed home, after that, and had two babies.

Money was very tight, but Miss Jenks was a good manager. Among other things, she made her own hats, of course, and she often said that with a happy-looking hat, a woman could scrimp on all other items of apparel, even wear the same dress for years and years.

An Institution

Miss Jenks and her happy-looking hats became an institution in town. Some of the townsladies would ask her to make hats for them, but Miss Jenks never had time, with a husband and two small children, and another child on the way.

Then tragedy struck.

Miss Jenks's husband was taken ill and died, leaving her with two small children, and a brand new baby. We all wondered what

Miss Jenks would do, and we soon found out.

The day after the funeral, a little placard appeared in Miss Jenks's parlor window: HAPPY-LOOKING HATS, Made to Order, Prices Reasonable.

Custom-Made Hats Solved One Widow's Financial Problem.

With courage like that, you can imagine how Miss Jenks's story ends. She had many customers from the very beginning, and in a few years, she had a nice little shop on Main Street. She raised her three youngsters, and put them through college. On her 70th birthday, she sold the little shop and retired to the country, where her children and grandchildren visit her frequently.

The woman motorist was trying to navigate a traffic jam. She rammed the car in front of her, then tried to back up and knocked down a pedestrian. Then she tried to move over to the curb and ran into a hydrant. A policeman came up. "Okay, lady let's see your license." "Don't be silly," she groaned; "who'd give me a license?"

A visiting psychiatrist, wandering through the wards of a state asylum, was particularly intrigued by a patient who sat huddled in a corner all by himself, and scratched himself, for hours on end. "My good man," the doctor addressed the patient gently, "why do you stay huddled in a corner all by yourself and scratch yourself?" "Because," replied the man wearily, "I'm the only person in the world who knows where I itch."

A worker in East Berlin was fired when he showed up at work on time. He was accused of buying an American watch.

NO SONG IS LOST

A Short, Short Story by

C. S. MONTAYNE

He decided again that she was lovely enough to thrill him, so why, he wondered, wasn't he in love with her.

Mario went through the cool, cloistered half light of the living room in Edna's Amarillo Canyon bungalow and sat down before her baby grand piano in the work-room where the shade of the trees outside lay in thick, green dusk. He swept aside a heap of Edna's penciled manuscript, smiling a little superciliously for her composing efforts invariably amused him, and let his thin, nervous fingers roam the keys.

Usually melody soothed away any inner disturbance. But this afternoon, his talk with Hammond at the studio lingered unpleasantly. He found himself playing the elusive, fragmentary tune that had been in his mind for some days. He had thought it might be pointed up, hammered into a production number that could be played straight or used to satisfy the jittery inhibitions of the swing minded. Hammond had set a deadline for the thing he wanted. He had been very decided when he told Mario the song, words and music, must be in by the next afternoon.

Mario was embroidering the theme, trying to give it substance and body, when he heard Edna's car outside. Her Great Dane barked joyfully, the iron gate banged shut, her heels clicked rhythmically on the polished floor.

"I thought I heard you playing. Been here long?" Her slim hand slipped into his. "I looked for you at the studio. Hammond said you left at one."

Her hair seemed to glimmer in the light and shadow; her long, oval eyes were mysteriously enigmatic, her full lips parted. At that moment Mario decided again that she was lovely — lovely enough to excite romance, to thrill and inspire him.

He wondered, abstractly, while he lighted a cigarette for her, why he wasn't in love with her. Perhaps it was that strange superiority he felt — the constant knowledge that he had come to Hollywood from the concert stage, that the music he wrote was good, so much better than the banal, tinkling tunes. Edna laboriously ground out. It was true she had earned a great deal of money and fame of a sort from the full length cartoon comedy she had set to music. But he reminded himself, men like Hammond were not contracting for her to write arias and spot hit numbers for the type of picture, and the operatic star, on which he had been at work.

They dined on the terrace. The moon swung up across the canyon and the stars came out, one by one. Mario, lounging in the candlelight, told her his troubles.

"Tomorrow afternoon . . . am I an automaton to have a crank turned . . . and music come out? That song I was playing—" He gestured with his thin, artistic hands. "It is what Hammond wants, I know that, but—"

"It fades into nothing," Edna interpolated softly.

He nodded, deep in thought, hardly conscious she had gotten up and gone into the bungalow. He lifted his brooding gaze when he heard the ripple of the piano. He jerked his head sharply left, his eyes on the open doors, listening.

She was playing the same tune he had toyed with when she had come in. But this time the melody had a meaning, a significance. It built itself in a melodic tone picture that gripped him and held him fascinated. The middle part that had hung suspended, escaping him completely, was now a bridge that carried the burden of the theme surely across to its exquisite climax.

"Something like that?"

Edna came back through the cloying gloom. Mario stood, his young face earnest and intent, his hands trembling.

"Yes, something like that."

"Go in and write it down before you forget it," she spoke casually.

"Pencil and score sheets on top of the piano. Help yourself."

"But—"

She pushed him away, gently, decidedly. "Hurry before it goes."

Brennan, who was doing the lyrics, put words to the melody the next morning in Mario's hotel room. At noon Hammond heard the song, approved, and took Mario out to lunch.

"Funny how a little urging can get you artistic guys underway," he grunted. "Frankly, I don't like highbrow musicians. I'd rather work with the Tin Pan Alley variety—people like Edna Sheridan, Tommy Dorlon. But that's a good tune. Sounds like a natural."

It was after five when Mario's taxi took him to Amarillo Canyon. The Great Dane barked ominously when he opened the iron gate, but the dog was chained and Mario went on to the letter-box and key Edna left for him. There was a note saying she'd be back in an hour, on the living room table, an open manuscript on the piano rack. Mario saw its title, "No Song Is Lost," when he switched on the shaded light and sat down to play.

She had raided a Los Angeles delicatessen. When she put her car in the garage, she called for him to help her with the packages. Mario carried them in to the glistening porcelain table in the model kitchen.

He looked deep into the enigmatic eyes Edna lifted. He tried to answer her smile, but his lips were stiffly serious. She frowned watching his expression change dramatically.

"What did Pete Hammond think of the number? Why do you look at me like that, Mario? What's the matter? Something gone wrong?"

"Very wrong!" He was trembling oddly, the blood was pounding through him, his mind was confused. Only one thing had any clarity, any vision. "Why Edna?" he heard himself asking in a strange voice.

"Why—what?"

His hands closed about her shoulders. He was drawing her to him, hardly aware of what he did. "That song," Mario said all at once. "No wonder it was elusive and haunting! I must have heard it here the first night I came! It must have hidden in some far corner of my memory! It was your song—the theme piece you did for that cartoon nonsense—so good you took it out, shelved it! Why, Edna—?"

He broke off. She was close to him now and quite naturally, simply, her arms linked themselves about his neck. And she was smiling, not enigmatically, but happily.

"What is the theme of all music, of all life?" she asked, unsteadily.

Mario laughed. "Love, of course!" he told her, before he put his own arms around her and leaned to kiss the warm red of her curved, glowing mouth.

This Week In AMERICAN HISTORY

BY WILLIAM BRODIE

FIRST CONTINENTAL CONGRESS

A very important meeting began in colonial Philadelphia on Monday, September 5, 1774. Fifty five delegates attended. They came from all the colonies except far-away Georgia. They met and held their sessions, lasting seven weeks in Carpenter's Hall down at Fourth and Chestnut Street. They were the members of the First Continental Congress.

The delegates were meeting to consider grievances against the English government, and steps to correct them. Outstanding men of the colonies were there, among them Samuel and John Adams from Massachusetts, and Patrick Henry and Richard Henry Lee from Virginia. George Washington was also there, wearing his uniform.

Congress was meeting at a time of terrific tension. The stage had already been set for the outbreak of conflict at Lexington and Concord the following spring. The British Parliament had clamped down the four Intolerable Acts on Massachusetts. The port of Boston had been closed. The Massachusetts charter had been annulled. Persons accused of crime against British authority were to be sent to England for trial. It was now legal to quarter troops in any town in Massachusetts.

Massachusetts appealed to the other colonies for aid. From Maine to Georgia came support through the "Committees of Correspondence" that had been set up. United action through a central authority was needed. The call went out for an inter-colonial meeting and the date and place set for September 5, 1774 at Philadelphia for the First Continental Congress.

Peyton Randolph, the big, cheerful Speaker of the Virginia House of Burgesses, was chosen as President of the Congress. Charles Thomson of Philadelphia was made Secretary. The delegates agreed to vote by provincial units, each having one vote. There were conservatives led by Joseph Galloway from Pennsylvania, and radicals led by Samuel Adams of Massachusetts.

The Congress condemned the Intolerable Acts as unconstitutional and tyrannical. It approved defense measures for the colonies. It adopted the "Continental Association" boycott against British goods. On September 17 the Congress, led by the radicals, endorsed the "Suffolk Resolutions" from Suffolk County in Massachusetts. These resolutions, urging defiance against British laws, demanding arming of the people's militia, and economic sanctions against England, were carried to Philadelphia by Paul Revere, the ever-ready messenger on horseback.

On October 14 the Congress approved a "Declaration of Rights." And after preparing an address to the king and to the English and American people, The First Continental Congress adjourned on October 26, resolved to meet a second time on May 10, 1775 if their grievances had not been redressed.

The overall effect of this Congress was to push the colonies farther along the road to rebellion. Also, the people of the colonies began to think of themselves as Americans, rather than colonials. Patrick Henry summed up this feeling at the first session. "Government is dissolved," he said. "We are in a state of nature. The distinctions between Virginians, Pennsylvanians, New Yorkers and New Englanders are no more. I am not a Virginian, but an American!"
