Turnpike Safety Record Good Over Memorial

The outstanding safety record of the New Jersey Turnpike was maintained over the Memorial Day holiday, Joseph Morecraft, Jr., Chairman announced.

For the three-day holiday period, May 29 to 31 inclusive, the Authority carried a total of 415,607 passenger cars, trucks and buses. These vehicles transported more than 1,000,000 people in that period. There were several property and personal injury accidents on the Turnpike, but no fatal accidents.

In contrast, traffic accidents on the nation's public highways, in the 54 hour holiday period to midnight Sunday (May 31,) caused 310 fatalities. This broke the previous record of 241 deaths in 1953. On New Jersey's highways, there were but two fatal accidents over the Memorial Day holiday, one on a local street and the other on Route 1.

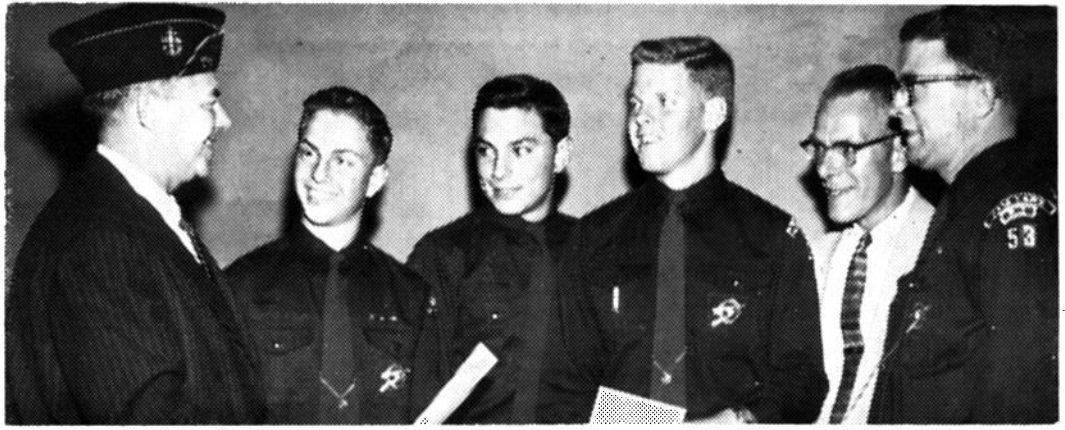

So far in 1959, the exemplary safety record of the Turnpike has been continued. In fact, it shows improvement compared with a year ago. To May 31 this year there were three fatal accidents on the Turnpike causing death to four persons, equalling a rate of 0.81 per 100 million vehicle miles of travel. It compared with a rate of 2.76 in the same period of 1958, and with a fatality rate of 2.42 in all of 1958.

The total number of all kinds of accidents to May 31 of this year equalled a rate of 73.0 per 100 million vehicle miles of travel, an improvement over the rate of 88.6 in 1958.

All of these accomplishments have been attained in spite of increased traffic and mileage on the Turnpike in 1959. The actual mileage this year to May 31 was 493,066,646, against 434,577,040 in 1958.

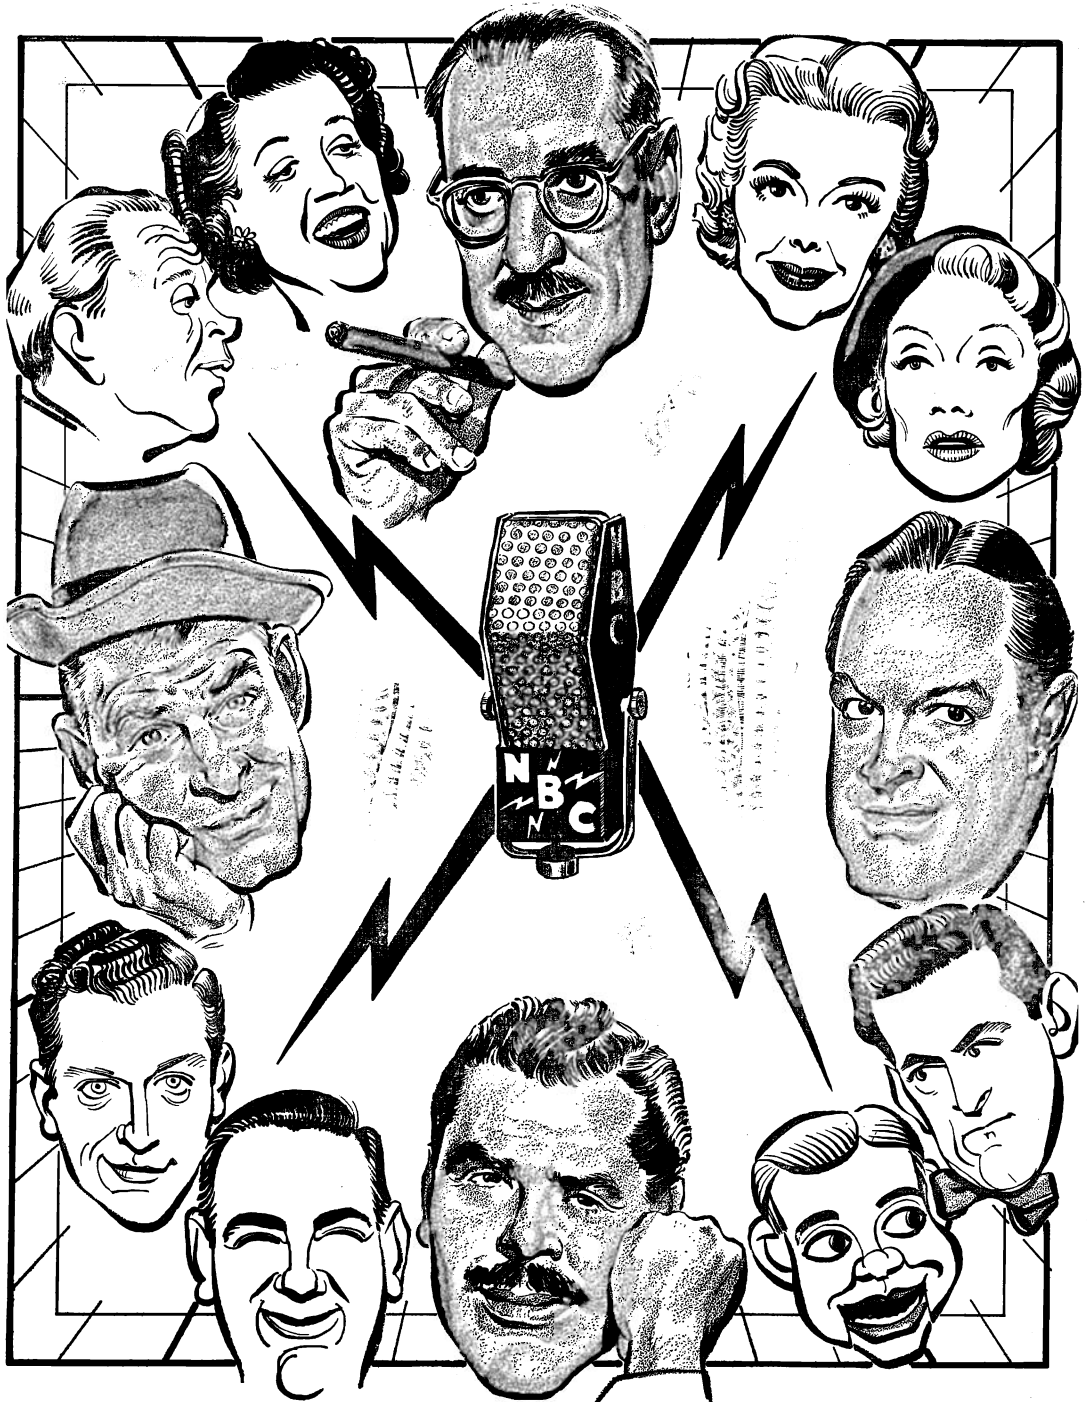

Traffic increased this year 14.8% compared with the first five months in 1958.

"The Authority, thus, is doing its part in assuring safe transportation to users of its highway," said Chairman Morecraft. "We are making improvements constantly which we believe will offer additional protection, and will continue to strive to provide one of the safest highways for travel in the nation."

AMERICAN HISTORY

BY WILLIAM BRODIE

SALEM "WITCH" HANGED

A strange and terrible delusion known as the "witchcraft craze" broke out in the village of Salem, Massachusetts, in the spring of 1692. It claimed its first victim on the summer's day of June 10, 1692. On that day the first "witch," a middle-aged woman by name of Bridget Bishop was hanged.

She had been condemned by the special court set up to try the witches of Salem. Mrs. Bishop was a tavern-keeper. Part of the charges against her was that of corrupting young people. But it was as a witch in league with the devil that she was condemned to die. The High Sheriff hanged her from the branches of a big oak tree at the top of Gallows Hill, a rocky height near Salem, also called Witch Hill.

Bridget Bishop was the first victim to die there. Nineteen others were to follow her, thirteen women and six men, before the witchcraft madness left the people of Salem. Nineteen were hanged, and one 80-year-old man was pressed to death with heavy stones.

The fear of witches was a superstition brought over to the American colonies from Europe where it had existed for hundreds of years. But in America the persecution of witches grew into a terrible delusion only in Massachusetts. In the winter of 1692 a group of Salem girls had been amusing themselves by listening to the lurid stories of an old Negro slave of the Rev. Samuel Parris, Salem minister. By springtime the girls began showing signs of hysteria and acting queerly. They fell down in fits. They barked like dogs, chirped like birds, and carried on in other strange ways. The affected children began to accuse persons of bewitching them.

Rev. Parris called in other ministers to consult with them. The devil seemed to be at work in Salem through his witches. The local doctor could find nothing physically wrong with the "affected children." Cotton Mather, the fiery Puritan minister, preached a violent sermon calling for punishment of all those "guilty of witchcraft and in league with the devil." With arms outflung, he cried in the pulpit, "Witchcraft is treason against the Majesty on high! A witch is not to be endured in heaven or on earth!"

A special court was set up to try the persons accused of being witches by children or hysterical women. The madness gripped the entire community. Only a few of the stronger characters and enlightened minds protested, at their own peril. Persons who tried to defend the accused were themselves charged with being witches. Torture was used to compel the accused to confess. No one knew who would be accused next and condemned on charges by the "afflicted children."

Resistance to the madness came later. The absurdity of the charges became evident with the important persons who, in time, came to be accused. Gradually the terror subsided and by October the people came to their senses. A revulsion set in against the cruelties which had been inflicted on innocent persons. The witchcraft craze passed from Salem.

It had been a terrifying delusion while it lasted. Its first victim had been Bridget Bishop, and 19 others were put to death after her, while 55 were tortured and hundreds imprisoned. Nothing like it occurred in America before or after. The errors and the blame of those who had participated in the Salem madness were shamefully admitted later.

Judge Samuel Sewall, one of the Salem judges who had tried the witches in special court, was to stand up with head bowed in Old South Church, Boston, while the pastor read the judge's confession of "blame and shame." And the 12 jurymen of the special court were also to sign a statement admitting their error and asking for forgiveness. Madness ended in repentance.
