British Poet's Name Inscribed On Monument At Princeton Battlefield

A promise made more than forty years ago to Alfred Noyes, the distinguished British poet, that his name would be added to an inscription written for a monument marking the common grave of fifteen Continental and twenty British soldiers killed in the Battle of Princeton on January 3, 1777, has been fulfilled.

The market is located on Princeton Battlefield, now maintained as a State Park under the supervision of the New Jersey Department of Conservation and Economic Development.

The monument was erected in 1918 during the first World War on the edge of the battlefield, then partly on the estate of the late Moses Pyne, graduate, benefactor and Trustee of Princeton University.

The site of the battle is rolling countryside, dipping down to picturesque Stony Brook, although now partly in a built-up section. Located a mile and a half from the center of Princeton Borough, it lies on both sides of Mercer Road, a one-time toll turnpike between Trenton and Princeton, constructed in 1807. The common grave is between Mercer Road and the old Lincoln Highway to Trenton.

Mrs. Agnes Pyne Hudson, granddaughter of Mr. Pyne, now living in Texas, and the late Robert C. Maxwell, Trenton advertising executive, each donated large tracts, and the New Jersey Legislature appropriated $100,000 for the purchase of land adjoining these gift parcels to establish Princeton Battlefield Park, under State maintenance. The project had the enthusiastic support of the late Walter C. Edge, then Governor, and a committee representing the American Scenic and Historic Preservation Society under the chairmanship of George A. Brakeley, vice president and treasurer, Emeritus, of Princeton.

Designed by Raleigh C. Gildersleeve, the monument consists of a circle of stone slabs with stone benches originally on three sides and a table in the center with the following inscription:

Near Here Lie Buried
The American and British Officers and Soldiers
Who fell in the Battle of Princeton
January 3rd, 1777

Dr. John Grier Hibben, then president of Princeton, presided at the dedication on May 27, 1918 and Mr. Noyes, a visiting professor of English from 1914 to 1923, gave the principal address, with Mr. Pyne participating.

In Mr. Noyes' autobiography, Two World for Memory, published in 1953, he wrote:

"On the battlefield of Princeton a monument was erected to the united memory of those British and American soldiers who had fallen there in conflict with one another and had been buried side by side in the same trench—a symbol of the new friendship that may one day save the world from final catastrophe. At the request of the trustee (of Princeton) I wrote an inscription for this monument:

Here Freedom stood by slaughtered friend and foe,
And, ere the wrath paled or that sunset died,
Looked through the ages; then with eyes aglow,
Laid them to wait that future side by side.

Mr. Pyne told me that after my death they would add the author's name to the inscription. If they do my shade will be proud indeed."

The promise was kept this year.

New Postage Stamps For This Year and Next

Three commemorative postage stamps scheduled for issuance during 1960 have been recommended by the Citizen's Stamp Advisory Committee and approved by the Postmaster General.

They are as follows:

2. A stamp honoring the Winter Olympic games to be held at Squaw Valley, California, to be issued on the opening day of the games, February 18, 1960.

3. A stamp honoring the 100th Anniversary of the Pony Express and the Postal Progress made in the century since then, to be issued on April 3, 1960.

All four of these stamps will be in the 4-cent denomination and will be issued in quantities of 120 million each.

Further details as to design, color and site of first day sales will be announced later.

The 3-cent Polio commemorative stamp, which was first placed on sale January 15, 1957, at Washington, D. C., to honor those who have helped fight polio, was removed from sale at the Philatelic Sales Agency in Washington as of the close of business May 29, 1959. This was one of the most generally printed large-size commemoratives, with a total of 186,949,627 being issued.

Jersey Patrol Boats To Fly Red Storm Pennants

Flying red pennants displayed on New Jersey's marine patrol boats will be part of the new mobile storm warning service to be initiated by the New Jersey Department of Conservation and Economic Development through the cooperation of the United States Weather Bureau on July 11. New Jersey will be the first to adopt the service on a state-wide basis.

The announcement was made by Commissioner Salvatore A. Bontempo in conjunction with National Safe Boating Week proclaimed by Governor Robert B. Meyner from June 27 through July 4. The pennants will alert all boat operators that winds exceeding 25 miles per hour are expected and that immediate shelter should be taken. The visual warnings will serve all types of vessels regardless of the communications systems they may have in use.

"The program is being offered to boatmen as part of New Jersey's Safe Boating Program," said the commissioner. "However, it will be successful only if the people heed the warnings and take the necessary precautions. Boat operators on all waterways throughout the State should recognize the pennant as a danger signal. This is another effort on the part of the State to keep pace with the tremendous increase in pleasure boating on New Jersey's waters."

Details of the new storm warning service were explained by Peter J. Gannon, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation in the Conservation Department. The installation of a teletype unit at the Navigation Bureau's Point Pleasant office has been arranged to serve as a direct tie-up with the United States Weather Bureau Office in New York.

Ernest J. Christie, chief of the New York Weather Bureau, says information from that source will include forecasts four times per day for north and south Jersey; coastal forecasts four times per day; hurricane advisories and other weather warnings at any time, day or night; position and movements of thunderstorms as observed by radar; marine reports including conditions of wind and waves at sea; and all notices for visual display of warning for vessels.

General weather warnings will be relayed from the bureau to area commanders in the nine districts who will inform marine patrol boats to display the small-craft warning pennants.

WILL IT BE NUCLEAR STALEMATE?

"Has the balance of power in today's world shifted to Soviet Russia and away from the U. S.? Would Russia win and the U. S. and her Allies lose if war should break out now or in the foreseeable future?"

These enormous questions, which are being asked throughout the world, lead off a U. S. News & World Report article entitled: "Soviet Threats: Power or Bluff?" In seeking answers the magazine went to military and diplomatic leaders both here at home and in key capitals overseas. Here are its findings.

First, we are still ahead of the Russians in the ability to wage total war — that is, nuclear war in which the ultimate weapons would be employed to bring absolute destruction to an enemy. We would, however, sustain devastating damage on our own side even in victory.

Second, the Russians have an overwhelming edge in the ability to wage non-nuclear wars — that is, so-called limited wars in which conventional weapons and only the small tactical atomic weapons would be employed. Her armies are far larger than those of ourselves and our Allies and are powerfully supported with air power.

Our military leaders think it will be some time before Russia will have enough long-range ballistic missiles to cancel out present superiority in intercontinental manned bombers. It quotes a top-level general as saying this about all-out war: "Assuming exhaustion of nuclear stockpiles in the early exchanges, both U. S. and Soviet Russia would lose their major population centers and the bases needed for support of large-scale military forces operating beyond their borders. If, under those circumstances, the concept of 'residual superiority' can be entertained, the margin probably would lie with the United States because of its greater and more efficient industrial and transportation system.

"The problem of the U. S. then would be twofold: to find the will to go on with the war; to reorganize so that the war could be pressed until the enemy surrendered."

At the same time, many military men are doubtful if the total weapons would be used in another war. Both sides, they think, would shrink from unleashing them and, perhaps, ending civilization as we understand it.

U. S. News also quotes an American authority as saying: "It is in the realm of national strategy and supporting military strategy that the balance of power seems unmistakably to be in favor of the Russians.

"They seek destruction of the non-Communist world and gear all strategy to that concept. The U. S. seeks only to contain the Communist nations and has no plan beyond that..."

There is, in other words, a lack of national direction on our side — and that, say the military men, becomes an increasingly serious weakness in our position.

Finally, U. S. News presents an interesting British view of U. S. - Soviet rivalry. It is based on the belief that a delicate balance is being approached, if it does not exist now. Specifically: "In a few years, the British experts conclude, the difference between American and Russian thermonuclear striking power will be academic. Both will possess enough to totally devastate the other. Then the growing 'nuclear stalemate', they believe, may be complete."

The Editor Speaks

VINCENT S. PARRILIO

A curious youngster wrote me and asked just HOW a college education benefited the average boy. I always say so, he pointed out, but I don't exactly say HOW.

Facetiously, I suppose, he enclosed a newspaper clipping which announced the annual debate between various Universities.

"They will have women on their minds as usual," the item said. "The question 'Resolved that the Dior look falls flat.' Other subjects include 'That a lady should choose death before dishonor,' that 'Good women tire of their role'.

"For that I need a college education?" queries the fellow.

I have talked so often about the ABSTRACT values of a college education that I am not going to do it again. A college education is, of course, absolutely necessary for law, medicine, engineering, divinity, science, teaching, business administration, and for those poor fellows who want to go into the rather unprofitable field of philosophy.

To all others, I say this: If you have to ASK whether a college education is going to do you any good, then don't go to college.

Learning, knowledge, education, is not anything that should be forced on a person like castor oil. The boy and the girl who feels the URGE to become an educated person will make up his or her own mind without my advice.

Those who want to go to college only in order to get a diploma or a husband should NOT go to college.

Children's Home Society Elects Officers

G. Earle Conover, director of Industrial Relations for John A. Roebling's Sons Corporation and a resident of nearby Ewing Township, has been re-elected president of the Children's Home Society of New Jersey according to an announcement released here recently.

The society is the state's oldest, privately financed, non-sectarian, non-racial child care agency.

Other officers of the society are James W. West, honorary vice president; J. Stanley Teunon, first vice president; John B. Sill, Jr., second vice president; Meredith E. Johnson, treasurer; C. Lester Greer, secretary; and John R. Mitchell, assistant secretary.

In acknowledging the contributions to the social well-being of helpless children made by the staff and Board of the Society, Conover said that current crisis situations that have developed in the field of child care have made it incumbent upon more citizens to join what he called "a new crusade for the homeless child."

Conover said that many friendly and understanding voices are needed to speak up in behalf of helpless children in view of the seeming panic created by admitted abuses of home life assistance and public welfare laws. It was unthinkable, he said, that abuses centered about relief given to unmarried mothers of more than one child should bring forth recommendations by grand juries and other public bodies that jail terms be given to such mothers with no apparent consideration or concern expressed for the needs of the children involved.

"It would appear that the presence of abuses in welfare situations should not create a condition that would mitigate against the future lives of the increasing numbers of homeless and out-of-wedlock children whose problems must be adequately dealt with.

"It would also seem that with the help of boards and staffs of private agencies, working in co-operation with public agencies, backed by citizen support in various communities of the state, thoughtful persons interested in the welfare of children should be able to look forward to the correction of abuses coupled with a more favorable attitude toward the needs of the child in each situation. The Children's Home society stands ready to join with other organizations in promoting a better climate of understanding and much-needed help for the homeless and friendless children of the Garden State," Conover declared.

FIRST MARINE COURT HELD IN POINT PLEASANT

Boating violations on the Memorial Day weekend gave New Jersey's Marine Navigation Court sessions an early start for the season.

The Court has been established to hear cases where the jurisdiction of other courts might be in question.

SOUTH JERSEY PRODUCES VALUABLE ILMENITE

Ilmenite is a mineral used in the manufacture of a superior white pigment, resistant to yellowing when exposed to "smog" or chemical fumes.

Amend Security Benefits To Women Who Remarry

The recent changes in the Social Security Act now make it possible to continue payments to some social security beneficiaries who marry other beneficiaries, according to Stanley J. Fiorese, district manager of the Paterson social security office. Mr. Fiorese says that before the 1958 amendments, if a person receiving benefit payments as a dependent or survivor of an insured worker married, his or her payments had to be terminated. The law as amended in 1958 removes some of the restrictions; although in some cases, marriage will still end benefits.

Under present law, a dependent's or survivor's social security benefit payments will not stop if he or she marries another person who is also receiving social security payments as a dependent or survivor. For example, a woman receiving widow's benefits could marry a man receiving dependent parent's benefits or dependent widower's benefits.

Marriage to a person who is not receiving social security benefits will end the benefit rights of a dependent or survivor beneficiary. If the marriage of a dependent or survivor beneficiary is to someone entitled to social security benefits as a retired or disabled worker, he or she, if of retirement age, may be eligible immediately for wife's or dependent husband's benefits without having to wait three years, as required before the 1958 amendments. For example, a woman receiving widow's benefits, who is age 62 or over, could marry a retired man receiving old-age benefits and be immediately eligible for wife's benefits based on her new husband's social security account.

For further information regarding the effect of marriage on social security benefits, contact your local social security office at 245 Market Street, Paterson, New Jersey.

Question of angles

BY FREDERICK SKERRY

A triangle? Sure, if you think in geometrical figures. But counting Mary Hill with the three men you'd have a square, wouldn't you.

Anyhow, we were on the Wild River bridge job. A nice change it was, too, with Barret Falls Center only a mile away; no construction camp in this picture. You could get room and board in somebody's house or you could take a room only and eat out. And the boys who hadn't been too quick in grabbing room and board took their meals at the Elite Lunch—that is, those who had got a peek at what was inside the three-sided counter. I did myself.

And Mary Hill was very good for the eyes. Fresh and sweet and cool-looking she was in her white rig, even on the hottest day, and lovely to look at, I figured she was 28 or 29.

That steel crew, though, was a new breed to Mary Hill. A happy-go-lucky bunch, as ready for a scrap as a frolic, working hard and playing hard. One night when I was almost the last to leave Mary said: "I suppose the danger you fellows are in all day makes you gay and light-hearted when you get away from it. Men fall sometimes, don't they?"

"Not often," I said, "It looks worse than it is. A man is careful. You get used to height."

By this time the competition for Mary was all but general. I was on the side lines, you might say. Being field engineer, I was some older than most of the boys, not so much, but enough to make me conscious of the difference. Jack Benz, Clem Sask and Dave Johnson seemed to be favored. Benz, a good-looking, wise-cracking chap, eventually monopolized Mary's time.

Dave Johnson was the quiet, serious kind, and an A-1 bridge jack. But, now that he seemed out of the running, he quit coming altogether. Clem Sask and Benz were not talking.

Working from both ends, we were now almost ready to join steel. Jack and Dave and Clem were together on the down river truss. They'd put the head of a strut or a diagonal in place for the riveters, then go down to bolt the foot. Dave was on a hanging platform below when Jack went down, leaving Sask to tighten the bolts. Jack had no sooner stepped on the platform, hadn't time to anchor his safety belt, when Clem Sask dropped a spanner. Clem let out a yell. But that 7-pound spanner was on its way and bounced off Jack's head.

Jack toppled to follow it down to the river. All of him but his legs was off that six-by-six platform. But that was as far as he went because Dave had grabbed a suspension line and had thrown himself across Jack's legs. Then he reached down the other hand and took a fistful of Jack's over-all—and whatever was underneath it—and pulled Jack back. And it all happened while you'd be striking a match.

An ambulance took Jack to the nearest hospital, a small one in a small town twenty miles away. I guess they felt at the hospital that this job on Jack was too much for them because they delivered Jack to a big city hospital.

We considered it an accident. But I wished it hadn't happened between that particular pair. The news got to the Elite before we did, and Mary shared the general gloom. Later Clem asked for his time—which was just as well.

A few days later Dave began to eat again in the Elite. And I quit staying late to look at Mary.

A few weeks, afterwards we were practically finished with the bridge; half the crew had left. One night I went to the movies and saw Mary and Dave sitting a couple of rows in front. I figured that Dave was making up for lost time. After the show, while on my way to where I slept, I crossed the street just as a car popped out of a cross street. I got it in the right leg.

Evidently a busted leg wasn't too much for that little hospital in the next town; anyhow that's where I landed. Dave was waiting when they got my leg set and in a cast. I had been wondering about him and Mary, but he was no talker. But I was sure I'd find out something from Mary, if I could see her.

And I did see her the next afternoon; she walked into my room not a minute after visiting time began. But the only news she let out was that Dave had heard that Jack was getting on all right but would be laid up for a long time.

For three weeks Mary came every day. Then the crew was through with the job, and Dave, making a last evening visit, was as dead-pan as ever. That puzzled me, and I banked on Mary being less shut-mouthed.

And, thinking of her, I realized that once out of the hospital I'd see little of her. I had that load on my mind when she came next afternoon looking pleased as Punch. She told me how the gang had bid her goodbye the day before. Then she said:

"I had quite a compliment last night, Charlie. Dave asked me to marry him."

"Congratulations, Mary!" I said. "Dave is a grand guy." And I meant it.

"Yes, he is," she nodded. "He'll make a fine husband for some girl who won't worry about him while he's climbing over bridges. But I had to turn him down. I'll marry nobody I have to worry about at the start. That's that. Now look, I just talked with the doctor. He says you can leave here in two or three days, but you'll have to go easy on that leg, even after the cast is off. He's getting crutches for you. Now I have it all figured out. I have a perfectly good house and odds of room, and nobody in it but myself—except when Ann is there doing housework—and that's where you go from here."

"Listen, Mary," I put in. "You've been an angel of kindness. But there's a limit, I know what these small places are, Mary, and I won't have you talked about on my account."

"I see what you mean." She looked down at me, and her eyes were dreamy. "Of course it would be nice . . ." I said nothing, and she wagged her head and looked at the ceiling.

"My heavens! Did a woman ever work harder for a man?"

That didn't make sense. "What man?" I said.

"Listen, Mary," I said. I felt all hollow in—"You! Who else, for goodness sake?"

side. "Don't kid me—not about that."

"I'm not kidding—anything but." She took my hand. "Charlie, you are dumb! Did you think I was a district nurse, or something—coming here every day?"

"But—" I could hardly speak. "I thought—well, with Jack and Dave . . ."

"Business, dear," she cut in. "I over the Elite Lunch, so why wouldn't I build up good will with the customers? You never asked me out."

"Not because I didn't want to," I said. "But all those fellows, Jack and Dave—"

She gave a snort. "You didn't think a woman would be interested in the only man around who didn't seem interested in her. No. So I had to find out all about you from those others. And you had to go and get yourself hurt for me to get a good chance at you."

"Listen," I said. "A minute ago you said you wouldn't marry anybody who climbs bridges."

"I know I did," she admitted. "But your climbing days are over, Charlie—Doc says."

That stopped me. Still, I could always have a good berth in the plant—or some other plant. My tongue seemed tied, but I managed to make it work. "Would you marry me, Mary?"

She was off the chair like a flash and sitting on the edge of the bed, holding my hands. "He's said it!" she laughed. "The dumb bunny has actually said it! Would I." So, after all, you might say that the affair turned out to be a pentagon.

This Week In AMERICAN HISTORY

BY WILLIAM BRODIE

THE "KEARSARGE" VS. THE "ALABAMA"

There was only one real sea fight during the Civil War, but it was an important one for the hour that it lasted. It took place off the coast of France, on the bright Sunday morning of June 19, 1864.

On the cliffs and shore line of the French harbor of Cherbourg thousands of people were gathered to see a most unusual sight—a fight to the death between two American warships. The Confederate commerce raider Alabama, being refitted in Cherbourg, had challenged the Union war vessel, the Kearsarge, which had come there in the hope of meeting up with the Alabama.

For two years the Alabama, a ship of about a thousand tons, built in England for the Confederate government, and equipped for both sail and steam, had roamed the high seas destroying United States shipping in all parts of the world. Captain Raphael Semmes of the Alabama was swift and clever. Before the Kearsarge caught up with him he had destroyed about 70 ships, a big portion of the United States merchant marine of that time.

During the Alabama's two years of raiding, from the Atlantic to Singapore and back, there had been nothing to oppose her on the ocean. It was like a grand tour well supplied with captured ships' stores. Since the Alabama had no home port to which to bring her prizes, she usually set fire to the captured ships. Then her crew got the thrill of watching the flames "run up the tarred rigging like fiery demons to the mastsheads, with burning ropes flying to the wind."

When the Alabama returned to European waters she put into Cherbourg harbor to be refitted. And there she met up with the U.S.S. Kearsarge commanded by tough Captain John A. Winslow. The Kearsarge was about the same size as the Alabama, with slightly heavier armament. Two years of success had made the Alabama's captain quite cocky. He challenged the Kearsarge to a fight. Captain Winslow quickly accepted the challenge and steamed out of Cherbourg into neutral water offshore to await the Alabama, which came out with flags flying, while the crowds on the shore watched intently.

Semmes of the Alabama was quick-triggered and hasty. Winslow of the Kearsarge was slower, more methodical. At a range of a thousand yards they opened fire, and circling round and round the two ships came closer, pouring in broadsides. The Kearsarge's guns fired more accurately. The Alabama was struck repeatedly. Soon her machinery was wrecked. She caught fire and began to list.

The watchers on the shore saw her turn back toward the harbor, while the Kearsarge followed, firing steadily. Then the white flag went up over the Alabama. Too late. Before all her crew could be saved she sank, taking many of them to the bottom with her. Most of the survivors became prisoners of the Kearsarge, but Captain Semmes was rescued by a British ship.

The battle had lasted exactly one hour and two minutes. And at the end of it the destroyer of many ships had at last met up with her own destruction.
