PROGRESSIVE PILGRIM —The comely miss in garb reminiscent of our Colonial forebears is Louise Errico, a guidette on the guest relations staff of the National Broadcasting Company in New York. The Thanksgiving season — like all holiday periods — brings huge crowds to the TV and radio studios where Louise and other attractive guidettes describe how programs go on the air.

PLAYING WITH FIRE — Dr. Frank Baxter isn't trying to learn from fire eater Lou Manly how to do the trick. He is actually using this act as an example to explain how the sense of touch works—during the colorcast program, "Gateways to the Mind," which will be repeated Sunday, Dec. 6 on NBC-TV Network.

New Jersey Streamflow Survey Completed

A special compilation of streamflow records in New Jersey for the post war years, 1945 to 1950, has just been completed by the Dept. of Conservation.

These documentary records of daily streamflow floods and roughts during the five-year period, as recorded at 79 gaging stations in New Jersey, will be of current and historical interest to many engineers, scientists, conservationists, lawyers and public officials. The wise planning, optimum development, maximum use and necessary protection and control of the water resources of the State are of concern to all citizens and particularly to those entrusted with the stewardships of this natural resource. Adequate knowledge of the quantity and quality of water available in all parts of the State is basic to wise use and sound planning.

The records were compiled by the Trenton office of the United State Geological Survey in cooperation with the Conservation department water supply and policy division. The report is entitled Special Report 14, Surface Water Supply of New Jersey, Streamflow Records, October 1945 to September 1950, and it is a continuation of a series containing all streamflow records since the beginning of stream gaging in New Jersey.

California's Population Increases Steadily

One of the major moving firms in the country reports that in the second quarter of this year 39.8 per cent more families moved household goods to California from areas in the east and mid-west than in the like period of last year.

Seaway Brings New Jobs To Chicago Area

The Geography Department of the University of Illinois has completed a study on the impact of the St. Lawrence Seaway on the economy of the Chicago metropolitan area. The study finds that the Seaway will be responsible for 38,000 of the new jobs which will open up in metropolitan Chicago in the next six years. Total expansion of employment in the area in that period is forecast at 270,000. The report says: "It is an honest evaluation to say that the impact will be minor—but minor only against the background of the tremendous economic complex that is metropolitan Chicago."

1959 Corn Crop Will Add To Our Surplus

According to an Agriculture Department prediction, the 1959 corn crop will add 500 million bushels to the nation's surplus, even though consumption of the grain is at the highest rate in history.

In the marketing season which started October 1, it is estimated that domestic consumption and export will account for 3.9 billion bushels — a new record, 166 million bushels more than in the previous marketing year. However, the consumption estimate is 500 million bushels less than the expected 1959 harvest of 4.4 billion bushels. Since there were 1.5 billion bushels in surplus at the end of the marketing season which ended September 30, it is indicated that the carryover next September 30 will be a new record 2 billion bushels.

Farmers took in the 1959 crop from plantings which covered 15 per cent more acreage than last year, partly due to termination of Federal planting controls. The increased corn plantings were offset in part by cutbacks in production of oats, barley and grain sorghums. However, total output of feed grains was up six per cent from last year on a tonnage basis.

Eisenhower Plans To Visit Asia

Never in history has a President of the United States visited Asia. On December 3, however, President Eisenhower plans to start a tour which will take him through Italy and Turkey to Pakistan, Arghanistan, India, Iran and Greece. Later, after the Paris conference of the Western Big Four, the President plans to visit Morocco. Partly, the President's trip appears to be aimed at achieving an propaganda initiative to help build up the U. S. position in the Cold War. Partly, it is preparation for the East-West Summit conference due to be held some time early next year.

Most Vanilla Made From Coal Tar and Woodpulp

Americans annually consume 400 million gallons of vanilla ice cream. The Food and Drug Administration is pondering a decision on whether manufacturers are to be allowed in the future to label ice cream as "vanilla" when it is flavored with artificial vanilla, made from by-products of coal tar and woodpulp industries. Pure vanilla is used in only 15 per cent of the total.

SPECIAL STARS— Singer-actress Janis Paige will be Bob Hope's guest star for the season's third "Bob Hope Show" Friday, Dec. 11 on the NBC-TV Network. The full-hour Hope special also will star Ernie Kovacs and other guests to be announced.

'TALES OF WELLS FARGO'—Dale Robertson (left) stars as a rugged and uncompromising Wells Fargo agent, Jim Hardie, in the NBC-TV Network Monday night Western-adventure series built around incidents in the history of the express company.

A visiting psychiatrist, wandering through the wards of a state asylum, was particularly intrigued by a patient who sat huddled in a corner all by himself, and scratched himself, for hours on end.

"My good man," the doctor addressed the patient gently, "why do you stay huddled in a corner all by yourself and scratch yourself?"

"Because," replied the man wearily, "I'm the only person in the world who knows where I itch."

AN ARWIN PRODUCTION
A UNIVERSAL-INTERNATIONAL RELEASE

Joseph Cromwell, Assistant Professor of Psychology, Eastern State University, had a date with a beautiful redhead. He should have been quite happy. He would have, but for the fact that he was married to a blonde. To make the situation more complicated, Kitty Blair, the girl with the gleaming auburn tresses, was a student in his course. "Fine psychologist I am!" Joe said disgustedly to the mirror in his room. "A pretty woman catches my eye, two weeks later I'm married, and then I find out what she's really like!"

Joe gave his tie an unnecessary adjustment and thought of the meeting with Kitty. He had promised her tonight he would have a solution. Marcia, his wife, had seemed more reasonable the last time he talked with her, he reflected. She should see matters his way now. It wasn't as if she loved him, or ever had.

Joe walked down the hallway and knocked on the door of her room.

"I want to talk to you, Marcia."

"Come in," Marcia called.

Joe entered. Marcia was dressed in a low cut back gown. She was sitting down and applying the finishing touches to her make-up. Long blonde hair, carefully brushed, fell to the marbled perfection of white shoulders.

"Well, what do you want?" she asked irritably.

"About the divorce, Marcia. You know our marriage is nothing to either of us now. You can file the suit on any decent grounds you choose. My lawyer will handle it for you. I'll give you the house and a fair alimony."

"Oh, shut up and get out!"

Joe stood motionless for a moment, resentment rising within him. He clenched his hands until the knuckles whitened, then turned and walked from her room.

Sitting dejectedly in his study, Joe thought back to when he first met Marcia. He was in Miami on terminal leave from the Air Force. After the years overseas, her beauty had dazzled him until he thought of nothing else. Even now her past was a mystery to him.

She started to change before the ink was dry on their marriage certificate. He tried to make their life more than a mockery of the ceremony, but Marcia wasn't interested. She soon made it perfectly clear that his attentions bored her. Also, that she didn't want to alter the marriage by divorce, threatening scandal and headlines if he sued for one.

His thoughts turned to Kitty Blair. All the things he loved about Kitty became vivid in his mind. The coppery-red hair, the melody of her voice, the warmth that lifted his spirit each time their eyes met across the classroom. From that first glance, Joe knew he wanted Kitty to be a part of the rest of his life.

Joe looked at his watch. Seven-forty-five, and hour and fifteen minutes until he was to meet her.

"What can I tell Kitty now?" Joe asked himself. "Where do we go from here?"

Suddenly Joe knew what to do. He walked to the wall safe and worked the combination with swift, quiet movements. He opened the safe door and lifted out a heavy metal box. Raising the top, he removed his savings, almost five thousand dollars in cash and bonds. He locked the strongbox, replaced it, and closed the door.

I can't offer Kitty less than marriage, Joe thought, and any divorce proceedings I start here will see her cheapened unfairly. A Mexican divorce only requires three days, and we can be married there as soon as the decree is granted.

Joe walked quickly from the house and hailed a cab by the corner drugstore. There's a plane tonight we can take, he reflected. Kitty and I will find a new life together. We'll have warm lovely days on some sandy beach.

"And after that?" he asked himself. Well, there were other jobs, other towns.

The cab pulled up in front of the Mayflower Hotel a few minutes later. Joe paid the driver and entered the lobby. It was eight-fifteen by the lobby clock. He was forty-five minutes early. He continued on into the bar.

He ordered a Martini. An occasional drink was a good thing, he mused. He remembered he hadn't touched the stuff before he entered the Air Force, still didn't care much about it. A few drinks while on pass had always brought a welcome relaxation, he recalled. It helped a man get out from under the pressure for a while . . . a temporary escape . . . sort . . . of . . .

It hit him then! That's what he was doing, running away. He wasn't really solving a thing. Sure, Kitty loved him enough to do what he wished, but what would be the cost to her?

Joe's short-lived elation left, and he stood there discouraged. He realized he must tell Kitty tonight that it was no use, that Marcia had the upper hand. Nothing but a miracle.

Joe leaned against the bar and felt the bulk of the money and bonds pressing against his side. He reached a hand to shift them. A glimmer of hope flashed in his mind. A meal ticket was all he had ever been to Marcia, a means of getting the things she wanted. Maybe, just maybe, he thought, if I go to her and offer her my savings, the car, and the house she will change her mind.

Joe glanced at his watch. Eight-thirty-five.

He had time to make the attempt and get back to the hotel lobby before Kitty came. He threw a bill at the bartender and ran for the door.

The whirling propellers of the giant Constellation synchronized into one roaring sound. Silvery wings lifted the huge plane off the runway. Gaining height, it turned and flew southward. Inside the cabin a couple relaxed in adjoining seats, holding hands.

"I'm glad you changed your mind," the man said.

"You really needn't have worried, Darling. It was just a matter of what was the best thing for us to do under the circumstances."

"Did you get the money?"

"I have it and the bonds with me. The strongbox is locked. I had to put it in my overnight case. The bonds are in both our names. I'll get the strongbox opened and cash them in New Orleans tomorrow." The blonde-haired woman placed one hand on her sleek, swarthy companion's arm.

"He wanted a 'divorce' so bad! What a laugh! I'd like to see his face when he finds my note tonight, and learns he and I were never legally married, that my divorce from you was never final, Carlos." Marcia smiled contemptuously in the dim light of the reading lamp overhead. She thought of the lovely, expensive clothes she would buy in New Orleans tomorrow.

"Joe can have his 'divorce' — he's paying for it!" she said.

The hand of the wristwatch on the arm of the trim stewardess walking up the aisle just then pointed to nine o'clock.

This Week In AMERICAN HISTORY

BY WILLIAM BRODIE

ST. CLAIR'S DEFEAT

One of the worst defeats ever suffered by an American army occurred on November 4, 1791. On that day the Indians cut to pieces the army of General St. Clair on the east fork of the Wabash River in western Ohio.

The battle was part of the constant warfare between the westward pushing white settlers and the red men for possession of the land. The prize here was the great stretch of rich wilderness country between the river known by the beautiful Indian name of Ohio, and the Great Lakes.

In 1790 the government sent troops under General Josiah Har-mar to Ohio to check the Indians who were attacking the white settlers. Harmar built a fort on the Muskingum River, near the spot where the city of Marietta now stands. He then made an expedition against the Indians. They drove him back in defeat.

A year later President Washington chose General Arthur St. Clair to lead an army against the Indians and avenge Harmar's defeat. St. Clair was governor of the Northwest Territory which included the Ohio country. He set out with an army of 2000 men to build a chain of forts and secure the Ohio country against Indian attacks.

President Washington had warned St. Clair to be alert against surprise and ambush, but the warning apparently wasn't heeded. The expedition had bad luck from the beginning. Discipline was bad. There were desertions. And St. Clair wasn't in good health. His army had been reduced to about 1400 men when it camped on the banks of the Wabash without taking proper precautions against a surprise attack.

For days St. Clair's movements had been watched by Indian scouts under the wily Tecumseh. The attack came at dawn, a favorite surprise hour of the Indians, upon the sleeping, unprepared troops. At the chilly sunrise of November 4th the fierce war whoop rang out from the woods and hundreds of warriors, led by Chiefs Little Turtle and Blue Jacket, swarmed upon St. Clair's army.

The surprised troops were quickly disorganized, despite the personal bravery of St. Clair and other officers, and slaughtered by the hundreds. Only a fraction of the army escaped by flight into the forest, leaving more than 600 dead, and all their supplies, on the field. St. Clair was lucky enough to be among the survivors.

When the news reached President Washington weeks later he burst into fury, crying, "Oh, God! Oh, God! St. Clair is worse than a murderer! How can he answer to his countrymen!" But when he calmed down, Washington said, "General St. Clair shall have justice . . . he shall have full justice."

St. Clair was severely censured for this terrible defeat. Though he continued to be governor, his name remained in bad repute and he never rose again in public esteem.

The Indians, flushed with their victories over Harmar and St. Clair, grew bolder in their raids and massacres. It remained for a Revolutionary War hero, General "Mad Anthony" Wayne, to defeat the Indians two years later and break their hold on the Ohio country. After that came the big rush of settlers from the East, and ten years later, in 1803, Ohio became the 17th state in the Union.
