Is Ray Robinson All "Washed Up" or will he Bounce Back Once More?

LOSER
SUGAR RAY ROBINSON

Sugar Ray Robinson, a talented worker at his profession of punching opponents at so much per punch, long has been regarded as one of the greatest pieces of fighting machinery ever assembled. There are many followers of ring affairs who contend, with unlimited vehemence, that this is the greatest fighter "pound for pound" in boxing history.

The record books and a spectacular career, ribbed with many spectacular highlights, provide strong support to such contentions. For twenty years, Sugar Ray has been blazing a win-replete trail of brilliant splendor through ring annals. In 152 fights, against the most formidable opposition which could be tossed at him, he has been a loser only seven times. He has held the welter-weight championship of the world and the middleweight crown as well, often coming back from long layoffs to conquer the man who previously dethroned him.

So, the picture of Robinson being a former champion is not a new one, and neither is the spectacle of this skillful, foot-fast and foot-loose ring marvel regaining his title. He has performed this difficult feat repeatedly. The old saying "They never come back" certainly can not be applied in Robinson's case. This boy fairly specializes in coming back.

The question is: Can he do it again?

Or: Is he really "washed up" for certain, this time? For, whittled down to a mere two states in the matter of world's middleweight championship recognition (New York and Massachusetts), Robinson lost even those provinces when he was handed a stunning surprise package by Paul Pender, a former fireman from Brookline, Mass., who defeated him in Ray's defense of his cut-down crown last Friday night.

This was an amazing spectacle, the little-known Pender taking the decision (in friendly territory) from Robinson on television. Granted that Ray was ring-rusty (after a layoff of 21 months) he still did not seem authoritative enough and far unlike the Robinson of past glories. His punch failed to pack its previous thunder.

As a result, Pender won a split decision in a fight which contained many dull moments and which drew considerable booing from the fans. Robinson resembled an old man as he went through the night's paces, looking every bit of his 20-years-plus of fighting. On at least two occasions, he had his 29-year-old opponent in readiness for trouble, but lacked the accuracy and stamina to turn it on.

Accordingly, Pender who was a 5-to-1 underdog, kept coming in during the late rounds, employing in-and-out tactics to catch the judges' fancy in the closing innings.

In his first defense of the middleweight title he had recaptured from Carmen Basilio close to two years ago, Robinson tried desperately to knock out his lightly-regarded challenger in the early rounds, but Pender was too fresh and fast to be nailed solidly. Ray was in charge during the early going, but once Pender realized that Ray was showing signs of tiring, he came on strong. That did it, bringing Pender his 36th victory in 43 fights and his eighth straight triumph. It was a big night for the bitter battler who feels boxing is not the place for the father of two small children.

Pender is frank in stating that his sole reason for being in the ring is the opportunity to make a lot of money, and now that he has won a title, he hopes to do just that. He drew down the biggest purse of his career for the encounter with Robinson (about $28,000) while the defeated champion received about $90,000 — ironically, one of his smallest for a title bout.

Sugar Ray contends that he will beat Pender in their return bout, now in the negotiating stage. But a great many fans and those who have watched Robinson through the years, wonder out loud if perhaps his bark finally has become worse than his bite. They speculate on the possibility that Robinson really has reached the end of his effective fighting days. It is revealing to note the picture of Robinson on this page — a Robinson in defeat.

The picture was snapped in Sugar Ray's dressing room, after he had lost to Pender. It reveals the proud boxer, dejected and wearing the signs of battle. It is Ray's intention to bring back his winning style. But he alone can provide the answer whether he's up to it.

Meanwhile, there are only the questions.

LOWER TAXES --- HIGHER TAX REVENUES

Washington Report, which is published by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, says: "Immediate income tax reduction for all individuals and corporations is feasible, and vitally needed to stimulate economic growth."

The reader may wonder how this is possible in view of the precarious federal budget situation. Washington Report provides this answer: "Properly applied, the reduction would actually increase the amount of government revenues in a short time, distribute the tax burden more equally, promote stability of the dollar, provide both the means and incentive for business to tackle new and expand going enterprises and create more jobs for our increasing population." It is proposed that any temporary loss of revenue be made up by an across-the-board excise tax, set at a low uniform rate.

An important tax reform bill is now before the House Ways and Means Committee. Known as the Baker-Herlong bill, it has bipartisan sponsorship. The bill is designed not only to provide much needed tax relief, but to provide enterprise with the incentives which will result in more business activity, more and better jobs — and increased tax revenue as a matter of course.

Finally, as Washington Report also observes, this bill would strike directly at the roots of the inflation problem. Under the existing tax system, demands upon our economic productivity are growing faster than the ability of business capital to keep up. Inflation inevitably follows.

NOT SO EASY

Some people still think that the price problem can easily be solved — that all you have to do is pass a law.

Every year since the Korean War price control legislation has cropped up in Congress, under various guises. And it's dollars to doughnuts that the same thing will happen in the next and succeeding Congresses.

There's just one thing wrong with price control by legal fiat. It has never worked and never will work. It creates more problems, and more serious problems, than those it is designed to solve. It deals with the symptoms of inflation, not with the disease itself. It's as if a doctor prescribed a handkerchief as the solution to a heavy cold in the chest.

Anyone who remembers our experience with price and the related controls following World War II will realize the truth of these statements. The normal processes of production and retail distribution were disrupted. There were shortages of all kinds of commodities. Black markets flourished — at the expense of the honest merchant and the overwhelming majority of consumers.

That's exactly what will happen again — if we are so foolish as to think a piece of legislation can do anything constructive about price inflation.

THAT'S A FACT

The Editor Speaks

Poor Dragoljub Ivosevic really has nothing to do with this column. But his story is so touching that I thought I'd tell it to you, anyway.

Dragoljub, who is a student of theology, and a poet whose works have never been published, wanted to come to America from his native Yugoslavia. So he crawled into one of the long metal boxes under the railroad cars that are used for carrying batteries, and started on his way.

But, in Trieste, he was discovered and pulled out. He was taken before the Circuit Court, and the judge asked him why he wanted to go to America. Wasn't Yugoslavia good enough for him — or for anybody? Dragoljub replied that he wanted to see the world and particularly America.

"What to see in America?" the judge asked.

"Well, there is the Statue of Liberty, and then there is the flea circus in New York."

"Fleas?" queried the judge. "We have them here."

"Yes," replied Dragoljub, "but the American fleas are trained."

The judge gave him eighteen months in the hoosegow where he would have plenty of opportunity to train his own fleas.

America is just what you make it yourself. To some it is trained fleas. To others it's money. But to most of those who came to these shores not only to see the Statue of Liberty, but to enjoy everything for which she stands, it is ideal.

Look at any telephone book or city directory. In them you will find names of every origin. They have found everything here that they or their ancestors came for.

But here is one piece of advice to all prospective immigrants — and all young Americans as well: If you want trained fleas you have to train them yourself.

FOCUS

EAST-WEST — Not to be outdone by Eisenhower, Nikita Krushchev will depart next month on his own "peace trip" to the populous India-Burma-Indonesia regions. It was first believed that the recent menacing actions by Red China toward these countries had lowered Soviet prestige in Southeast Asia, and that Krushchev's visit at this crucial time would put him in a ticklish diplomatic situation, since he wants to please both factions.

Now, however, Peiping has adopted a somewhat milder tone toward India and Indonesia in the past few weeks, possibly due to Soviet diplomatic intervention. Krushchev's task of putting a peace-loving label on communism may succeed, if popular fears of Red China pressures have receded by the time of his arrival in Southeast Asia. Then we may see the Soviet leader hailed by millions of Orientals as their true friend and protector.

MIDDLE EAST — President Nasser of the United Arab Republic has not been in the public eye lately. This is due to the fact that presently, he is quietly concentrating on domestic affairs. Using his realm as a laboratory, he is seeking a workable form of democracy with a moderate kind of land reform and a combination of private and state enterprise. He is receiving substantial Western aid for this project. If he succeeds, he plans to expand it throughout the Arab world.

AMERICAN ECONOMY — Although America's economy grew during the past century at a rate unparalleled in history, this pace slowed during the 1950's to the point where the United States stands almost at the bottom of the list of major nations in terms of economic growth. That statement was agreed upon by a panel of 11 distinguished economists, meeting at a forum conducted by the National Industrial Conference Board. The American preference for more leisure was mentioned as a factor contributing to slowed growth.

TAXES — In 1913, the Tax Foundation tells us, federal government tax collections came to about $35 million, which was collected at the rate of $67 a minute. In 1959 tax collections were about $59 billion collected at the rate of $111,912 a minute.

The theme of the anniversary is "For God and Country."

The high point of Scouting in 1960 will be the Fifth National Scout Jamboree when 53,200

Boy Scouts, Explorers and their leaders will camp at a 2,000-acre tent city on a ranch at Colorado Springs, Colorado next July 22 to 28.

Those remaining at home will conduct Cub Scout Jubilees, Boy Scout Jubilee Camporees and Explorer Jubilee Field Days the weekend the National Jamboree is in progress.

The National Good Turn for 1960 by the Boy Scouts of America will be their third non-partisan Get-Out-the-Vote campaign, conducted in cooperation with the Freedoms Foundation of Valley Forge.

NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH

by Russ Arnold

A PERSON IS

IN THE MORNING—

AND BECOMES PROGRESSIVELY SHORTER DURING THE DAY-- SOMETIMES AS MUCH AS 1-INCH IN 12 HOURS!!

Because the tail always streams out from the comet head in a direction opposite to the sun - when moving away from the sun, the tail is AHEAD of the head!

Russell Arnold

First National Listed As 130th Largest In Country

First National Bank of Passaic County is the 130th largest bank in the United States as of December 31, 1959. The American Banker, daily newspaper in the banking field, tabulates the relative positions of American banks every six months. The deposits of First National as of December 31 upon which the position was based were $226,363,845.

F. Raymond Peterson stated that bank size is important only to create a strong depository for funds of the businesses and individuals of the communities served by the bank's seventeen offices, and to serve the borrowing needs of the large industries of the area as well as smaller businesses and individuals. Each a small local bank serving the needs of the community, but with the combined resources of all seventeen offices available to it.

name in the sky

BY FREDERICK LAING

Mr. Shar looked up at the blue sky where the two planes were spelling out his name in clouds of white vapor, and he frowned and shook his head. They weren't doing it right. One of the planes hadn't crossed the "H" quite soon enough, and the "R" should have had a wider curve. But these were minor details, and didn't account for his feeling of frustration.

The truth was, this was one of the worst disappointments of his life. For years he had dreamed of seeing his name up there in the sky, some day when everybody would know what it meant. And there it was, a mile high and a mile wide, and everybody knew it meant perfumes it meant S. B. Shar, the perfume king.

But at the moment Mr. Shar was busy trying to estimate its value in terms of costs and sales. So much an hour for the flyers. Was it worth it? Was there any real way of checking the results? In short, to Sam Shar, the man, his name up in the sky meant nothing.

He walked down the avenue with his hands behind his back, scolding himself. So what did you expect? That it would make you feel nine feet tall? That you could step right over the top of an office building? Or maybe sprout wings yourself and fly?

He was, as it happened, a small man physically, though it had been a long time since this fact had made any real difference. He was a big man in a world where a hundred pounds more or less was only a number on the bathroom scale.

Lately he'd been a little annoyed with the slight proportions of his figure. He'd been taking swimming lessons, and progress had been slow. The coach kept telling him to relax, not to fight it, that you could stay afloat by just moving your arms and legs a little — and what kind of advice was that to give a man who was being choked by water?

He looked up at the sky again, frowned and shrugged. What did it amount to? Just more publicity. He walked for quite a while with his head down, his hand behind his back. He saw a man looking down into a street grate, lowering a line with a weight and a blob of gum, trying to pick up a gold pencil someone had dropped.

"You're not doing it right," he told the man. "Get the gum at the heavy end."

"Are you trying to tell me how to run my business?" the man asked.

Mr. Shar scowled and walked on down the street. He walked over to the east side, by the river, the section where he had grown up, a poor emigrant boy. He hadn't been back in years. He had stayed as far away as possible. Now he suddenly wanted to go back, though just what he wanted to prove he wasn't quite sure.

He saw a couple of kids sitting by the pier, fishing.

"You're not throwing the line out far enough," he said. "No wonder you don't catch any fish."

"You could do better?" the kid asked. "Let me show you," Mr. Shar said. Reluctantly the kid let him take the pole. "You don't have enough line. Give me some more of that string."

And it so happened that a moment or two after he threw out the line, he felt a tug on it. Mr. Shar was exhilarated to the point of terror. He had never caught any living thing in his whole life. He pulled a three-inch fish out of the water, but it might as well have been a large shark. The sight of the wriggling fish was too much for him. His mouth was contorted in a grimace which at this moment was very much like the expression on the jaws of the fish.

The boy was jumping on the edge of the pier. "Pull him in, Mister! Don't lose him!"

Mr. Shar tried to reach for it, wanting desperately to rise to this test of manhood, but he shuddered and closed his eyes.

"Here, I'll grab 'im," the kid said. But he didn't quite. As he reached for the shimmering fish, it slipped out of his hands. He reached a little farther, and then . . .

Too shocked to feel anything for an instant Mr. Shar saw the boy's form hurtling down into the water, and a moment later a lad beside him was screaming, "He's my brother! He can't swim!"

About half an hour afterward, Mr. Shar was trying to believe it had all happened, that he had looked around, seen no one near enough to call, had thrown off his coat, kicked off his shoes and trousers, and told the brother to run for help.

He remembered going down . . . down toward the water, remembered the blinding impact, the moment of blackness, the small hands clutching at him. He remembered telling the boy to relax, not to fight it that he could stay afloat by just moving his arms and legs a little.

And now he was in a room that smelled of garlic, and people were bending over him as he lay on the bed. He saw a policeman's uniform. He saw the kid he had rescued, and his brother. He saw, unmistakably, the mother, the concern, the relief, the gratitude in her kindly, work-worn face.

The policeman was asking his name and address. They had to have it for the record, he said. Beside the policeman was a man with shell-rimmed glasses, a newspaperman if he had ever seen one, and Mr. Shar had seen a great many.

He smiled to himself. What a story this was going to be! He had told his public relations staff more than once that they didn't know how to go out and make a story. They had one now, and it was worth a million dollars. He frowned, thoughtfully. Well, fifty or a hundred thousand, anyway.

He glanced out of the window, taking his time about answering the policeman's questions. He saw the kids waiting outside.

"They're friends of the brothers here," the cop said. "And they're going to be your friends for the rest of your life. Any time you want to be a bigger hero than George Washington, just pay a call to this neighborhood. Now about that name and address, if you don't mind. And your business."

Sam Shar looked out of the window another moment. One of the kids pointed to him and there was a loud cheer.

The cop was still waiting with his pad. The reporter's eyes were sharp, his ears seemed to move forward.

"Smith," Mr. Shar said. "Sam Smith, salesman."

The reporter looked disappointed, but he asked, "How does it feel to be a hero, Sam? A hero to all those kids?"

"I feel," Sam said, "like my name was written in the sky."

AMERICAN HISTORY

BY WILLIAM BRODIE

UNITED STATES LEAVES THE GOLD STANDARD

A "golden age" ended in the United States on January 31, 1934. At three o'clock in the afternoon of that day President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed a proclamation which devalued the American dollar in its relationship to gold.

The day before, on January 30, 1934, Congress passed the Gold Reserve Act compelling the Federal Reserve Banks to surrender their gold to the U. S. Treasury. Furthermore, the Gold Reserve Act directed the President to devalue the dollar by fixing the weight of the gold dollar between 50 and 60 percent of its former weight.

President Roosevelt acted promptly under the new authority given to him by Congress and the very next day after the Gold Reserve Act was passed he devalued the gold dollar to 59.06 cents. It was an inflationary move, planned to raise the price level of that depression period.

The move to abandon the gold standard began early in 1933. On March 11, 1933 President Roosevelt ordered a stop on the export of gold. On April 5th of that year his executive order directed all holders of gold, whether in the form of coin, bullion, or gold certificates, to turn it all over to the Federal Reserve Banks in exchange for other forms of money.

Then on June 3, 1933 Congress repealed the "gold clause." Anyone who had a financial contract that called for getting paid in gold, could now be paid off in any currency that was legal at the time. A great protest arose from the holders of such gold clause payment contracts. They claimed breach of contract. They were bitter. But there was to be no more payment in gold to them.

The gold standard was now a precious relic of the past.

Under the Gold Reserve Act the President reduced the fine weight of the gold dollar from 25.8 grains to 15.5/21 grains (a grain here is traditionally derived from the weight of a grain of wheat). This was done by announcing that the U. S. Government would now pay a new price of $35 an ounce for gold, instead of the old price of $20.67. This was in effect a reduction in the value of the gold dollar to 59.06 cents.

With gold revalued, it was also nationalized by Congress. The Federal Reserve Banks were ordered to turn their gold over to the U. S. Treasury. The banks got gold certificates in return to be used as reserves against deposits and their own notes. The U. S. Treasury got a bookkeeping profit of $2.8 billion on the deal. Of this "profit" $2 billion was put into an Exchange Stabilization Fund with which to stabilize the dollar. And the American people got a 59 cent dollar.

We must remember that the devaluation of the dollar was a "mild" inflationary measure whose purpose was to raise prices during a severe depression. Instead of printing paper money, the Government raised the price of gold, cutting the dollar's value by 40 percent. No longer was it possible to get "a dollar's worth of gold for a dollar at the treasury." There was much grumbling and criticism about the new "59 cent dollar," or the "baloney dollar," as some critics called the devalued dollar. But all to no avail. The American gold standard had departed with a stroke of a Presidential pen.
