Jack Benny Is Phil Silvers' Guest on May 7

Phil Silvers (left) stars as the Silver Dollar Kid, the most unlikely lawman of the Western frontier, and Silvers' guest, Jack Benny, portrays the most cowardly gunman in the Arizona territory, in Phil Silvers' second comedy special of the season, "The Slowest Gun in the West," Saturday, May 7, on the CBS Television Network. Nat Hiken, creator of "Sergeant Bilko," wrote the script for the hour-long spoof.

CRACK! Across the green frocked infield players lunge, stretching to reach the ball. In from the outfield sweeps a graceful figure and down goes his glove — down to the grass tops. Too late, and from the stands comes the victory roar of the home fans. IT'S A HIT! The 1960 baseball season is in full swing.

Gleason on May 6 Godfrey Special

Jackie Gleason guest stars with Arthur Godfrey in the second "Arthur Godfrey Show" special of the season, Friday, May 6, on the CBS Television Network. During the hour-long program Godfrey takes viewers to such diverse places as the island of Jamaica, Boston and a simulated Broadway theatre, where he meets Gleason to see a production number from the hit musical, "Take Me Along."

Joelson Names Hoffman Regional Co-ordinator

Charles Joelson,, Democratic candidate for Congress in the Eight Congressional District, announced today the appointment of Walter F. Hoffman of Wayne as his regional campaign co-ordinator in the up-county townships and boroughs.

In accepting the appointment, Hoffman said: "I am very happy for the opportunity to further the candidacy of Chuck Joelson. He has ability, experience and independence — a combination which will make a fine congressman and also an attractive candidate to the many independent voters in the up-county area."

In 1957, Hoffman was chairman of the Meyner for Governor Clubs of Passaic County.

Hoffman is a member of the Wayne law firm of Hoffman & Humphreys.

Hoffman is presently counsel to the Wayne Township Board of Adjustments. He is the 1960 Passaic County chairman of "Law Day — U.S.A." and chairman of the Peace Through Law Committee of the Passaic County Bar Association. He is also active in the Preakness Reformed Church and the Kiwanis Club of Wayne. Hoffman will work with Charles Convery, who is Joelson's general campaign manager.

Olympic Aspirations —

Lovely Carin Cone Has A Real Fight On Her Hands

CARIN CONE

Lovely swimmer from Ridgewood, Carin Cone, will be seeking her second Olympic berth this year, but obviously, she has an arduous assignment facing her. This much is certain: it will be no cut-and-dried breeze, but rather a turbulent path through choppy competitive waters.

The lesson was etched out for Carin painfully in the recent national AAU indoor swimming and diving championships, at Bartlesville, Oklahoma. For, she lost two of the crowns which had been regarded as certainties for the Cone treasure cabinet, the 100 and 200-yard championship races. Both were close, hard-fought battles, but it was small consolation to Carin that the margin was whisker-wide.

For, these defeats snapped a winning streak the pretty 20-year-old Ridgewood resident had been piling up and for the second time in her victory-lined career, Carin had to settle for second place even while setting a record. The first time it had happened, British mermaid Judy Grinham had bested Carin in the 100-meter backstroke of the Olympic games in Australia, back in 1956.

Then, in this Oklahoma meet last weekend, Carin was judged the runner-up to Lynn Burke, the California girl who looms as a strong threat for more of the same when the fight is launched for places on the United States swim team in the Olympic games, scheduled to start in Rome the end of August.

Small wonder that Carin is intent on plunging into intensive preparation for the Olympic trials. She knows it will be harder this time.

No stranger to hard work, however, Carin is prepared to go all-out in the merciless grind of getting into top physical and competitive condition for those all-important trials. Granted that she will be facing formidable opposition, the odds are that Miss Cone will be on that aquatic roster when the personnel for our representative team is finalized. But unquestionably, it will take a lot of plugging and unrelenting effort.

The next big assignment for the Ridgewood aquastar will be the outdoor national championships in Indianapolis during July. Carin will be defending her other two titles in this meet, the 110 and 220-yard outdoor crowns. She is determined to finish on top once more in this next time out, even though the competition will include the same Miss Burke who has been putting on a determined drive for all the marbles since she moved to California.

Miss Burke, 17 years old, followed Horace Greeley's advice by going west, living and training with Chris Von Saltza, the extremely successful Coast blonde star of the water. There, she has been under the skilled direction of George Haines, coach of the Santa Clara Swim Club who also is the mentor of the U. S. Olympic swim team. He predicts improvement from Miss Burke in the near and distant future, so the Cone assignment is clear: work and more work.

Other area hopefuls for places on the Olympic roster, in different sports, also are pointing determined bids for places on the huge squad, but a big question mark is wrapped around one of these: Fair Lawn's Dave Sime who has been aiming for the games for a long time.

Sime came mighty close to making it in 1956 when the speedy sprint star was burning up the country's tracks in spectacular manner, breaking records and steadily moving into an inevitable niche on the U. S. entry. However, he suffered a muscular leg injury which put him out of action completely and so he had to sit out the action, after making a couple of determined tries in the California qualifications.

The former Fair Lawn High athlete has been a victim of tough luck in several meets since then, being plagued by a recurrence of his muscular difficulties even after it seemed he had attained complete recovery. A medical student at Duke University where he has been a popular and extremely successful athletic performer, on the varsity track and baseball teams during his undergraduate years, Dave was well on the way to further heroics on the Olympic squad until he was sidelined.

Now, trying to move back into top condition and apparently satisfied that he was physically ready, Sime came back to the track wars only to encounter injuries again. He had to bow out of a couple of meets in recent weeks and expressed himself as sorely disappointed. Accordingly, it is a moot question whether Dave will be able to ward off any further swipes from the persistent jinx which has hovered over his Olympic ambitions.

Paterson product Stewart Thomson, big and husky, is training for an Olympic try. A weight tosser who has turned in many good performances, he is hopeful of gaining a place in the Rome safari.

What A 150 Years It's Been!

PART ONE

If you had been around in 1810, would you have guessed what the next 150 years held in store? Would you have imagined that ships would one day sail underwater and a man rise from the ground by sitting in a machine that spun a thin propeller, that a newly patented invention would become an American way of life, with our citizens opening 60,000,000 tin cans of food alone daily in 1959? Would you have dared to predict that women, still regarded as property by husbands and by law, would one day be able to vote politicians and products in and out of business? Could you have envisioned an eight hour working day and a time when a man of 60 would not be considered very old?

Though American life has changed in thousands of big and little ways since 1810, the change has been particularly dramatic in four key areas.

Primitive steam-driven automobiles were already chugging along English roads, Fulton's steamboat had made its historic journey up the Hudson three years earlier, and American cotton had been machine-spun since 1790. But despite these amazing feats, muscle power — human and equine — was still the major source of work energy in 1810. Not till 1826 was the first real American railroad built — all three miles of it, from Quincy to Charleston, Mass., the line operated by gravity, two horses and a stationary engine!

But powerful forces were pushing America toward the Jet Age. Steel mills (Bessemer patented his process in 1855) provided the material for new machinery; oil (first struck in 1859 by Edwin Drake) would soon give them a new fuel. By 1880, machine-made products accounted for 65 per cent of our national output; by 1900 over a million telephones were in use and the same number of homes illuminated by Tom Edison's bright idea. Three years later, a couple of brothers named Wright got a funny-looking machine off the ground at Kitty Hawk to launch the air age. Less than 8,000 "horseless carriages" were in use in 1900; by 1920, Henry Ford and other Detroit pioneers had seen to it that one American in 13 owned a car.

Today almost half the population (79,630,680 at last count) is licensed to drive some sort of motor vehicle, and over 67,000,000 such vehicles are registered in the United States. American airlines chalked up some 31 billion revenue passenger-miles in a recent year; the nation's railroads transported over 429 million passengers and nearly three billion tons of freight in the same year. To equal the electric power that America uses in just one year, 100,000 horses — working 20 hours a day, seven days a week, would have to keep going several years! The first atomic-powered sub, the Nautilus, is a triumphant success, and solar power to heat homes has been experimentally harnessed at M.I.T. Well might we say that America is a power in the world!

"America is a tin can civilization," Soviet journalist Ilya Ehrenburg once sneered. And the man was right. During 1960, you and your fellow Americans will open some 42 billion cans containing over 2,500 different kinds of products: tomato juice and tennis balls, detergents and drinking water, books, beer, bread — even bicycles, motorcycles and — of all things, Geiger counters, are now packed in cans! And the new push-button aerosols make "can't" an even more unlikely word, with such wonders as spray-on bandages, sandwich fillings and even an anti-dust furniture coating available at the flick of a finger. In terms of woman-hours saved, health hazards overcome, and expansion of the number of products available to consumers, few inventions have been more influential. Not bad for a small piece of metal plate!

Unlike most of the devices that changed the course of the modern world, the handy, dandy tin can was patented in 1810. That year, a Frenchman named Nicolas Appert had perfected a process whereby food could be preserved by being partially cooked and then sealed in glass jars. An Englishman, Peter Durand, went Appert one better by using unbreakable tin-coated metal cylinders. By 1819, his invention had been naturalized, with William Underwood turning out the first American "canisters". A competitor, Thomas Kensett, abbreviated the name to "can".

Along with the Colt revolver, the can of meat, fruit or condensed milk gave life-saving assistance to many a Westward-bound pioneer. Civil War combatants began the tradition of American G.I. reliance on the tin can. The American fighting man of World War II ate canned food, drank canned water, fought with ammunition from hermetically sealed cans (including canned smokescreens), got canned blood plasma when wounded, repaired his jeep with canned monkey wrenches, and drove canned motorcycles dropped to him by parachute! Another wartime boon, the hotcan, promises to cut the housewife's kitchen chores still further by allowing her to cook food right inside the can. Oh say can you see by the dawn of 1960's early light — a 150 year old tin can civilization indeed!

THE ELECTION AFTERMATH

The primary election is over. The votes have been tallied up, the winners have been declared, and there has been much rejoicing and lamenting depending upon to which camp you belonged.

Of course, it was the Republican party contests that held everyone's interest, as there were no serious contests on the Democratic ticket. The sensational contest assumed national significance, as the result of the liberal-conservative battle was predicted to be an important factor in the shaping of future Republican party policy. Clifford Case, in seeking re-nomination to the United States Senate, was overwhelmingly endorsed by the members of his party by a two to one vote. This would seem to indicate that the people are satisfied with his record and his liberal views.

In a major political upset, Walter P. Kennedy, secretary to retiring Congressman Gordon Canfield, defeated organization candidate, Mayor Paul G. De Muro of Passaic, for the Republican congressional nomination by a small margin. The result of this election must be construed to be the people placing their confidence in the judgment of Congressman Canfield, who has served this area faithfully for many years and won many friends.

Here is a man who, after so many years of public service, fought very hard for what he thought was right and had to suffer the indignities and abuse that was heaped upon him by the local press for doing so. For this reason perhaps the victory was a greater one for Congressman Canfield than for Kennedy himself. To see himself, in the twilight of his career, at loggerheads with his own party organization and bitterly denounced by most of the area newspapers, only to have the people — the people he served so long and so well — ignore all this and give him such a vote of confidence, must have been one of the greatest thrills of his life.

This clearly shows the wondrous workings of a democracy. The people, despite the frantic efforts of a few individuals who think they can dictate their opinions to the electorate via their newspaper columns and editorials, have the last word. The people do not forget the past easily and as this election illustrated, are not swayed in their opinion by these individuals.

Our heartiest congratulations to Senator Case, Mr. Kennedy and to all the winning candidates from both parties. While we do not yet endorse any candidate for any office, we feel sure that in the months to come all the candidates will present more clear-cut images that will enable us, and you the voting public, to make the wisest choice for each office in the November election.

Come Out And Play Drums With Me

The Editor Speaks

A young, but already very eminent physician told me that, in his opinion, there is altogether too much talk about illness. He expressed the opinion that, by means of television and, in lesser degree on radio, we are sticking our noses into altogether too many things that do not concern us. (He was referring to the recent so-called public information shows on childbirth, surgery, cancer and mental illness which were not very appetizing, if not downright disgusting, and certainly not very useful to the layman.)

I think my young doctor is right. There is altogether (third time) too much talk about illness and disease. It is perfectly proper that we should guard ourselves against the physical ills that befall the human body, of which many can be prevented by reasonable care and caution. But there is no sense in pounding it eternally into our ears and scaring the living daylight out of us.

Psychosomatic medicine is all the rage now. It is really nothing but the modernization of the old Roman idea, "Mena sana in corpore sano" — a sound mind in a sound body. But the rule also works the other way around — a sound body in a sound mind.

By this eternal harping on sickness, the mind is tempted to find sickness when it isn't there at all. Almost every human being has the symptoms of serious sickness some time or other, without actually having a trace of that sickness.

I myself — and you probably have had the same experience, have had almost every symptom of every disease in the book. If they leave me alone, I forget all about it and after a day or so the symptoms are gone. But if they keep reminding me I become more anxious and worried about it — and anxiety and worry can certainly bring on disease.

If you don't feel well and don't get better within a reasonable time, go and see your doctor. But don't let a lot of announcers or columnists diagnose your case.

FOCUS

HIGHWAYS — It is incredible that in less than six years the federal highway program should have snowballed so far out of hand that now its estimated cost is 73 per cent over the original staggering figure of $23 billion. The 40,000 mile interstate highway program was a glittering dream — one worthy and appealing. But, like others before it, it has turned into a spending nightmare. All those starry-eyed enthusiasts who believed that the one-cent additional federal gasoline tax which Congress imposed not long ago to "save" this program was "temporary", can now go stand on their dizzy heads.

NEWSPAPERS — Occasionally a reader wants to know why newspapers, including this one, keep pouring out "heavy" news about such things as the tedious course of disarmament efforts, the problems of underdeveloped nations half a world away, the urgent need of improvement in our educational system, etc. The answer is that in these times of swift change and imminent peril the people of a democracy need all the information they can get.

TAXES — We find that more and more taxes are being imposed upon the workingman to provide low-cost housing to great numbers of people, to keep hordes of people in idleness on welfare, to extend unemployment benefits in which widespread chiseling has been indicated, and to spend dollars in many other ways designed to capture votes, although every dollar must come out of the pockets of taxpayers and principally from the pockets of working men. Yet the liberals contend to be friends of the laboring man while, at the same time, turning his pockets wrong side out.

COOPERATIVES — One of the biggest rows imaginable is about to come to a head. The subject concerns the closing of an "escape hatch" by which the country's cooperatives have been relieved from payment of federal income taxes. Cooperatives started out as small communal enterprises to help farmers in their purchasing and marketing. Mainly they were successful — so much so in fact that they began to branch out into many other fields, having an unfair edge.

Follow the Blonde

By CHARLES ADAMS

I checked my coat and hat, straightened my tie, and went in. It was a swanky night-spot, and it was crowded. I waited until I caught the headwaiter's eye. He came right over, and gave me a table marked "Reserved."

Every week, for nearly a week, I had had slipped that headwaiter a bill. Tonight I doubled the tip. He thanked me quietly and just as quietly went away.

A waiter took my order. When he was gone, I gave the room a slow once-over. There were plenty of janes there, and some of them were blondes. But the blonde I was looking for hadn't come in. I had a pretty good hunch, though, that she would show up. I wasn't worried.

Rimini was there. I wasn't surprised to see him—he had dropped in the night before. Tonight he was alone, again, at a table in a corner. Once I caught his eye; he gave me a fishy stare. After that I didn't look at his bland, fat face any more.

I watched the floor-show. A smart swing orchestra was giving hot music, and some lovelies were going through a snappy song-and-dance.

It was the niftiest show in town. But I couldn't keep my mind on it. Not tonight—

The number had just ended when the blonde came in. She was alone — she never had an escort; and she made her customary entrance, with the waiters bowing, and everybody staring, while the owner of the club showed her to the best table in the room.

She was quite some girl, that blonde. She couldn't have been more than twenty-five; and she was a stream-lined pretty. Tonight, her lips were thick with rouge, and her eyes seemed greener than I had ever seen them. She wore a dress I didn't recognize; a close-fitting, low-cut sheath of red silk. As she took her seat — her fingers sparkling with rings, that necklace she always sported strung around her neck — she made a swell picture, and everyone in the place had a peek.

The necklace was a platinum-and-diamond affair. It was a honey. Minski thought it cost about thirty grand. And Minski should know about those things.

I had never seen the blonde look at anybody in that place. Tonight she didn't look at anybody. She ate slowly, daintily. She had ordered champagne; she didn't drink much of it. When she finally left the place, I glanced at my watch. It was twelve-fifteen. Rimini got up, and went out. I waited a minute or two. Then I paid my bill, got my coat and hat, and quickly stepped out onto the sidewalk.

The blonde wasn't in sight.

There was a black sedan parked across the street. As I stood there, on the sidewalk, it moved over and stopped close beside me.

I stepped in.

Ruffo was driving. Minski was in the back. I sat down beside Minski.

"Okay?" I said.

"Okay," Minski said. "At last — okay!"

We started.

Ruffo knew what was expected of him.

We had made all of our plans; we knew pretty well what we had to do that night. There was a lot of traffic, and Ruffo wasn't taking any chances.

"Step on it!" I said.

"What about them red lights?" Ruffo said.

"Forget the lights," I said. "Get going."

Ruffo stepped on it. We jumped east. We lammed through traffic as though it wasn't there. We hit Fifth Avenue. We turned and headed north. Once a cop yelled at us. We didn't pay any attention to the cop.

We were going to the apartment house where the blonde lived, and we didn't want any interruptions this night.

The blonde lived in that apartment house, alone. And every night, for nearly a week, she had been showing the ice she wore around her neck in that club — And every night I had been in that night-spot, watching her — with Minski and Ruffo waiting outside.

Beyond Sixtieth Street, we burned up the Avenue. At Ninetieth Street, we turned east. We stopped in front of the place where the blonde lived.

I said: "Drive around the corner and wait."

Ruffo said: "Okay, boss."

Minski and I climbed out. We went into the apartment house. The hall was empty. The elevator door was closed. I rang the bell for the elevator. As we stood there, waiting, Minski's poker-face looked darker than usual, and his cold, black eyes were like slits. He was jittery. So was I.

The elevator eased down, stopped. The door opened. Minski and I stepped in. We were both dolled up in tuxedos; the elevator man didn't ask any questions.

I said: "Fifth floor."

The elevator slid up, stopped. Minski and I stepped out. We walked to apartment C. I took a bunch of keys out of my pocket, found the right one, and unlocked the door. We went into the apartment.

No one was there.

I said: "We won't have long to wait. She'll be along soon, all right."

Minski said: "We better get set."

It was a swell three-room apartment, all cluttered up with the sort of stuff a rich girl surrounds herself with. We walked through the sitting room, and into the bedroom. There was a closet — not any too large—in the bedroom. Minski and I slid into the closet and closed the door.

The closet wasn't lighted. We waited there, in the dark.

After a while, I thought I heard someone moving in the sitting room. Then I heard a buzzer sound. Minski touched me on the shoulder. I reached under my arm, and got ready. I could feel Minski getting ready, too.

But we didn't make a move until the girl screamed. Then we left that closet in a hurry.

We found what we expected in the sitting room. Rimini was there — he had followed the blonde, all right. He had just pinched that necklace, when we came in with drawn guns.

When he saw us, he stood there; his blank white face showed nothing; he didn't say a word.

"We're cops," Minsky said. "Just two dumb cops."

"And the lady," I said, "is Miss Goldie Gleason. She's a smart cop — Get the idea, Mr. Rimini?"

I have a hunch he got it.
