Tips on Touring

False Economy

Wise women watching family budgets know that some corner-cutting can lead to false—and foolish—economy. How many of these fruitless attempts at cutting car costs do you recognize?

1. Trying to beat the meter. Drive around town for a half hour hunting a free space or a meter with time left on it. Saved: a few cents parking charge. Lost: time, fuel, and the wear and tear of stop-go driving (far worse than highway cruising).

2. Trying to miss toll gates. Drive miles out of your way over inferior roads, through heavy traffic. Saved and lost (about as in No. 1) vary with time and distance—unless you select real back roads for shunpiking. This I applaud.

3. Drive miles to get cut-rate gasoline. Saved: a few cents. Lost: the fuel used for the trip, plus possible harm from fuel of unknown quality, plus the service and car-check you get from a dealer with a well-known brand.

4. Stretch the period between oil changes and lubrication. Saved: a few dollars a year. Lost: performance, plus power, efficiency and safety.

Your modern car is a beautifully made machine, as well as a big investment. You hurt it and cheat yourself if you cut corners. Real economy comes with proper care.

JERSEY FACTS

New Jersey is the only maritime state which includes oysters among its agricultural products. Oystermen throughout the State, however, are governed by the Shell Fish Laws through the Division of Shell Fisheries.

The proposed Federal-State compact for the administration of water and related resources of the Delaware River Basin introduces a new concept in government. For the first time, the federal government may be invited to enter a partnership with a group of states (New Jersey, New York, Delaware and Pennsylvania) to create an agency to guide the development of a Basin area.

Paterson Has A Rooting Interest In New York Titans

HARRY WISMER
President

Professional football in a second major league, will be brought to the New York area by a completely new team this Fall, when the Titans of the American League make their appearance. It's a club given strong drive and impetus with grid addicts welcoming the additional opportunity to see their favorite game displayed.

This sector already has many football fans who follow pro football, through the many years in which the New York Giants have been in operation. The Giants, competing in the strong National League, have given an excellent account of themselves and are aiming for more of the same this year as they endeavor to take the championship, after making threatening gestures in that direction only to lose out in the playoffs.

Now, another pro club appears with the formation of the Titans, performing in a league which has some excellent representation, reaching out to the mid-west and southwest, as well as to the Pacific Coast. Unquestionably, this new league is a well-rounded and shrewdly-planned project, with some outstanding men of means behind the various clubs and a great deal of moola represented on the respective front-office rosters. Hotel magnates, oil tycoons, and businessmen provide considerable of the greenbacked sinews backing the league with strong support.

The American League also is gathering added power from television revenue which is being earmarked for the circuit's pool, for equal division among all the teams. This is a complete departure from customary league ventures where each team is left to make its own best deal. In this case, the video pie will be laced with sugar on a collective basis and cut up into slices for every team.

The New York branch of the loop, the Titans will be headed by Harry Wismer, the famous sportscaster who has been close to pro football for many years. He has had a slice of at least two clubs in the National League, still retains considerable stock in the Washington Redskins, but has placed this interest on the market so he can dispose of these holdings while going full-steam ahead in the new circuit. Wismer has been moving well with his New York entry and has lined up a strong coaching staff and capable aides, also is obtaining some strong talent to provide the Big Town with the sort of talent skill to which it has become accustomed.

The Titans will have one local asset which never has been found in any pro football venture before: a full-fledged Paterson product as one of its office-holders and stock owners. This is Dr. Fred J. Crescente, prominent Paterson physician who is vice president of the club and exceedingly energetic in operation of the new franchise. The Doctor provided members of the New Jersey press with a closeup look at the coaching and officers staff this past Wednesday afternoon at his home, with the entire lineup of top brass joining in the festivities.

A close friend of Wismer, Dr. Crescente was one of the key figures in the early planning of the Titans' project and has been engaged in many of the pre-season preparations of the squad, as well as helpful in the myriads of details which just a project requires. A rabid sports follower for many years and an active golfer and bowler himself, the medico is delighted with his feature role in the New York football club's introduction to the Gotham scene. The Titans, bringing the town its second pro grid team, will be playing at the Polo Grounds with emphasis on night games.

Sammy Baugh, the former college and pro star whose passing prowess brought him all-time fame when he won the monicker of "Slingin' Sammy", is head coach of the Titans. A well-rounded staff of assistants will be working with Baugh in supervising the club and among these are Johnny Dell Isolla, defensive coach of the new squad and for many seasons affiliated with the New York Giants until this year.

Baugh and Dell Isolla promise to add up to a potent combination, along with the other members of the mentors' staff as the Titans endeavor to click off a winning tune in the new venture. Sammy had coaching experience as a college boss and certainly acquired a great deal of grid know-how as a veteran aerial ace with the Washington Redskins. He promises to be an extremely popular figure in New York where big-name lustre such as he carries, will be helpful in making the new project successful.

Locally, interest promises to be high in this team too. Many fans from the Paterson area have indicated their eagerness to watch the Titans in action. With Dr. Crescente sparking the campaign, such interest is bound to grow in the months ahead.

What A 150 Years It's Been!

PART TWO

"La donna e mobile — a fickle and changeable thing is woman ever." Fickle and untrustworthy, yet as trusting and domestic as she was weak — that was how man had viewed woman for at least 2,000 years, and the male of 1810 carried on the ancient tradition. "A lady's name appears in the newspapers but twice: when she marries and when she dies," ran a popular proverb of the time.

How mobile la donna — the fastest-changing aspect of the American scene, in fact. Since a housewife opened the first can in 1810, a stream of labor and time saving devices for her have followed. This symbol of plentitude that revolutionized the existence of the human being ushered in an increasing amount of free time for other responsibilities. Women today have won the right to get their name in the papers for everything from PTA chairmanships to prominence in one hitherto masculine profession after another. Collectively, they're making news now because they're one-third of the labor force, spend 80 per cent of all family income and vote 70 per cent of all corporate stock — not to mention ownership interest in 500,000 small business. Manufacturers offer lines of sunglasses, screwdrivers and fountain pens especially designed for women, even shaving cream manufacturers package their product with an eye to the missus who may pluck it from supermarket shelves. No political candidate can survive without female votes — a far cry from 1890, when the territory of Wyoming was almost refused admission to the Union because it had given women the vote!

A gent named Christopher Sholes deserves much of the credit too; his invention of 1867, the typewriter, would eventually bring women economic independence. Even before that, in 1840, Isaac Pitman put the handwriting on the wall with his new system of shorthand. In 1870, the census-takers listed only seven women office workers throughout the country; a mere 40 years later women already held five-sixths of all office jobs. Two world wars and a host of labor-saving household gadgets recruited more from the home front; medical advances especially beneficial to women have put them in the majority. (Ominous, men, when you consider that old American tradition: the majority rules).

Women, admittedly, have a head start; today's baby girl has a life expectancy almost seven years longer than a boy born the same year. But the health picture for both sexes would have startled the citizens of 1810, to whom 50 was quite a respectable age and 60 was real old age. Today, 15,000,000 Americans are over 65, and the number is expected to reach 25,000,000 by 1980, according to figures supplied by Health Information Foundation. One of the major reasons for increased life expectancy is because the average person eats better and more nutritious foods through the variety of products that are available today. In fact, Dr. Wm. H. Sebrell, Jr., head of the new Institute of Nutrition Sciences said, "The industrial revolution created a large group of people in cities who were unable to grow food. The lack of knowledge and the poor economic conditions led to the diseases of malnutrition, as well as those of famine, becoming widespread.

"In our great industrialized civilization of today our very life depends to a large extent on food processing — food processing that retains nutrient value—and on an informed public that knows what they must eat."

The control of those diseases which were accepted as facts of life by early Americans — tuberculosis, pneumonia, mysterious "fevers" — makes each year of our longer lives more comfortable than the man of 1810 would ever have dreamed possible. But the process was well under way even then. Between 1810 and 1940, 27 new medical schools were founded; 44 years before the birth of Freud, Dr. Benjamin Rush anticipated modern psychoanalysis with an 1812 treatise on Diseases of the Mind. The '40's brought pioneer experiments with anesthesia; the '60's saw the development of pasteurization, the birth of antiseptic surgery, and the founding of the American Red Cross by Civil War nurse Clara Barton. In the 1880's a wealthy merchant named John Hopkins set a precedent ultimately followed by an even richer gent named Rockefeller, bequeathing more than three million to open a modern hospital and medical research institute.

The conquest of yellow fever — the development of insulin, the sulfa drugs and the antibiotics — the miracles of plastic surgery — isozoniade to control tuberculosis — the victory of the Salk vaccine over polio — surgical techniques that make it possible to revive a heart which has stopped beating — all these and more belong to the twentieth century.

What's coming? Life expectancies of 100 years or more, made possible by steroid hormones already in use? "Creative" electronic brains that duplicate the electrical impulses discharged by the brain of a human genius? After what's happened in the last 150 years, these scientific predictions seem downright conservative!

A PENDULUM SWINGS

Great Britain has had more down-to-earth practical experience with nationalization of industry than any other major non-communist nation. Not many years ago, it looked as if nationalization of almost all essential British enterprises and services was inevitable.

The pendulum has swung the other way.

Witness, for instance, the present plight of Britain's Labor Party. It is splintered among warring factions. Numbers of competent observers think that as now constituted it has no chance whatsoever of returning to power. The big bone of contention is Clause Four of the Labor constitution which calls for "common ownership of all the means of production, distribution and exchange. —i.e., total socialism. The party's leader, Hugh Gaitskell, recognizing that this philosophy has become repugnant to the majority of British voters, wants to modify it. But the die-hards won't go along. They refuse to see that Britain's long, extensive, and expensive experience with national socialism has produced profound disillusion, especially among the younger voters.

Witness, again, something that is due to happen next February 14. That will mark the tenth anniversary of Britain's nationalization of her steel industry. And on that date, in 1961, denationalization is expected to be completed, and the steel industry returned to private enterprise. The stock of 11 remaining firms the government still owns will be sold at auction, for a forecast of $115 million.

Britain still has a very long way to go in ridding herself of socialism. For example, her coal mines, railroads and medical services are still socialized, and are accounting for heavy taxpayer-borne losses. But she is moving — and the anti-socialist movement has the full support of the majority of British people.

We can learn an invaluable lesson from our English-speaking cousins across the Atlantic. For, between now and November the candidates for the presidency and lesser offices will argue many an issue. Some of the arguments will be forthright, some will amount to fence-straddling.

But there is one over-riding issue that, above all, should be dealt with squarely. It is nothing less than the question of the future direction of the government.

The argument, it seems to us, must be met head-on; the American people deserve at least that much. Are we to surrender to the Communists by in effect imitating them? Or are we to disprove their hideous philosophy by making this the freest possible of societies? That is the great political issue, and it would be a healthy thing if it became the focus of this campaign. The American people must face it sooner or later. The sooner it is got out in the open, stripped of subterfuge and double-talk, the better for the American future.

The American people are constantly told that a way to combat the Communist menace is to turn over more and more power, to say nothing of more and more of their wealth, to a super-state. If the people allow that to happen, there will be small need of combatting Communism — for we will simply adopt a Communism of our own, no matter what label is given it.

He's Moving Up Stream, Sam

The Editor Speaks

A reader writes: "You used to relate many humorous incidents in your column, and my family and I enjoyed them very much. Lately you have been devoting many of them to serious subjects and we have been disappointed. There is too little humor in the world today, so couldn't you please give us some columns in a more humorous vein?"

And another reader writes: "Thank you for finally devoting your column to some serious and sometimes controversial subject matter. This, my dear sir, has much more appeal to your readers, than your previous attempts at humor. Keep up the good work."

Having read these two letters you have probably reached the same conclusion I did: No matter what you do you are bound to meet both approval and dissatisfaction over your decision. You just can't please everybody. Anyone who tries to will find nothing but bitter disappointment.

I remember a fellow I knew in college who was elected president of one of the leading organizations on campus, and his defeated opponent was made vice president. The president was well-liked by the members and it looked like a good year for the club.

But soon there were differences of opinion over the method of sponsoring the club's annual affair, and in trying to please everyone, this poor guy wound up pleasing no one. The dissension increased and the president, by now thoroughly upset, resigned, being sadly disillusioned.

The vice president agreed to accept the vacated position on the condition that the final decision rest with him, that when he made his decision that would be it, and all dissenters had to abide by his decision. They agreed. And so the one the members didn't originally feel was capable of being their leader turned out to be fully qualified to handle the responsibilities of that office.

As regards the future course of this column, gentle reader, you may be surprised to hear it will be both serious and humorous. For in presenting capsule comments on life, we must include the humorous, tragic, inspiring, serious and other phases of life. I hope you'll enjoy them. Let me know if you do.

FOCUS

EAST-WEST — Only a screwdriver can detect an atomic bomb concealed in a crate, and only a million screwdrivers wielded by an army of men could ever make sure that a country even as small as Britain had dismantled its nuclear weapons. This is what makes the disarmament proposals at Geneva seem unreal. The discomforting impression is left — equally by the Russian and Western proposals — that both sides continue to stage an elaborately false play. Each wants to pretend before world opinion that it is doing everything possible to secure disarmament. Neither believes that it can really be brought about.

POLITICS — As almost everyone knows, Senator John F. Kennedy of Massachusetts, faces a critical test in the West Virginia primary May 10. Supporters of other potential candidates are being organized to vote for Kennedy's opponent, Senator Humphrey in the primary balloting. In this way they hope to knock him off as the leading contender for the Democratic nomination.

The open hostility toward Kennedy on the part of the powerful United Mine Workers union is another factor. For these reasons many feel that it is highly unlikely that Kennedy can win in West Virginia. On the other hand, it is generally agreed that, if the Massachusetts Senator does defeat his combined opposition May 10, his path to the nomination will be easy from that point on.

AMERICANISM — The late President Theodore Roosevelt once said: "Americanism means all the virtues of courage, honesty, justice, truth, sincerity and hardihood — the virtues that made America. The things that will destroy America are prosperity-at-any price, safety-first instead of duty-first, the love of soft living and the get-rich-quick theory of life." known crimes."

EDUCATION — Instead of individuals in the states contributing extra money to the federal government in order that the federal government may dole out educational handouts, wouldn't it be far better if the states themselves would collect that same money and hand it back to the individual districts in the state?

Mom and Daughter Home For Mother's Day

WATCH THE BIRDIE — Actress-model Suzy Parker arrived in New York aboard the liner Queen Elizabeth this week. Miss Parker, holding her four-month-old baby, Georgia Belle, is here to make a movie. The movie star can be remembered for her excellent performance in the motion picture, "The Best of Everything."

Diocesan Holy Name Societies Meet In Paterson

By GENE BROCKHAVEN

Detective-Sergeant Dennis McGowan arrived at the Greenvale Golf Club talking himself. He was annoyed at his friend Bill Bates for calling him on what was obviously a case for the coroner. He was annoyed, too, because his headquarters shift had ended an hour before and the day was one of those rare Indian Summer surprises of October.

He greeted Bates not too warmly.

"What's up?"

"Sorry to bring you out here, Denny," Bates began, "but there are one or two angles about this accident to Lonny Dahlgren that just don't sit right with me."

"What, for instance?"

"Well, resumed Bates, "I was one of the first to reach Dahlgren, after our pro, Jed Tilton, drove the ball that struck him. Lonny was out cold, with a terrible gash in the back of his head, behind the left ear. I realized he was badly hurt and turned to send for help. As I turned I noticed Tilton stoop and pick up the ball that struck Lonny, hold it for a second or two and then toss it into the rough nearby."

"I wondered about that, thought it kind of funny, and later walked over and picked up the ball. I noticed that the ball was a make I never knew Tilton to use before. I liked young Dahlgren, Denny. He was more than a son-in-law to me. I'm upset, naturally, and confused about the whole thing, and I just had to tell you about it. Tilton is in the locker room, now, if you want to talk to him."

"I'll see him. Where's the ball?"

"That's funny, too. In the excitement I put in the top of my locker and just before you got here I looked for it and it was gone. I remembered the make of it, if that'll do any good." And Bates mentioned a popular brand.

"M-mm, that is funny," said McGowan, and started for the locker room. He found Tilton hunched on a long bench between a row of lockers, seemingly near collapse.

"Hello, Jed," he said. "That was a tough break, but buck up, these things will happen. When you feel up to it, I'll have a talk with you. Routine, you know."

McGowan stopped to talk with the two men who had been playing with Tilton and Dahlgren and then walked out of the clubhouse and crossed to the golf shop nearby. He looked around the outer salesroom and walked to the showcase where golf balls, gloves and hats, etc., were on display. Noticing the make of ball mentioned by Bates he reached in and took one.

Next day, being Sunday, was McGowan's day off, but noon found him driving his small coupe into the Greenvale club grounds. The unfortunate death of Dahlgren interested him deeply. There were some puzzling elements about that tragedy he would like to straighten out in his own mind. Particularly Tilton's unnatural action in trying to hide the ball. He had a persistent hunch about that.

The club presented its usual Sunday activity, but McGowan turned immediately toward the golf shop, walking directly to the workshop in the rear. The workbench took his attention. A small bar of solder, half used, was lying at one side. McGowan took this and placed it in his pocket. He reached again and picked up a long, needle-like nail. He examined and pocketed it.

Again he turned his attention to the bench. After a few minutes he took a small envelope from his pocket and scraped into it some shavings from the bench. He left the shop and started for the caddy pen. He called over one of the boys and spoke to him. Leaving the boy he made his way to the practice tee, arriving as Tilton and a pupil were leaving. He greeted Tilton casually.

When they had gone McGowan looked about and walked to a thickish tree which stood about fifteen feet out from the tee and off to the right. He examined the tree closely, took out a tape measure, used it and left for his car.

For five consecutive days McGowan appeared at the club. And on each occasion he passed but a casual time of day with Tilton. Each day he sauntered about the club grounds, stopping to speak with caddies, employees and members. But for Tilton there was just that casual greeting. "How are you, boy?" No more, no less. Obviously Tilton wondered about the visits.

Friday evening, about eight, McGowan knocked at the door of the little cottage on the clubhouse grounds, which the club furnished as quarters for its professional.

Tilton opened the door.

"Can I come in, Jed?"

"Of course," Tilton answered as he led the way into a small sitting room. "Drink?"

McGowan shook his head.

Tilton went into another room, and returned shortly with a bottle and two glasses.

"In case you change your mind."

Looking at Tilton, McGowan thought. "The guy needs a drink."

"Nervous?" he asked, aloud.

"Why should I be," answered Tilton. He cleared his throat. "But I feel badly about Dahlgren."

"Want to tell me about it?"

"What is there to tell?"

"There's a lot to tell, Tilton."

McGowan paused and then leaned toward the other. "You murdered Dahlgren—and with premeditation!"

Tilton's head jerked around. His eyes stared, pop-eyed at McGowan.

"That's ridiculous!" he cried.

"You killed that man, Tilton, planned it and carried it out according to that plan. And I can prove it!"

"You can't prove anything, certainly not premeditation!" Tilton face, despite its tan, was gray.

"Well, here it is, Tilton." McGowan took a small package from his pocket, opened it and abstracted a long, sharpened nail, a half-used solder bar and a small white envelope, laying these things on the table beside him.

"Tilton, you were a trick shot golfer before you came to this club a few years ago. You have the reputation around here of being able to do 'anything with a golf ball'. No, don't interrupt. I know these things for facts. I know more, too.

"You were, and still are, in love with Bill Bates' daughter, Evelyn. In fact, you were to be married to her last June, but a few weeks before the wedding Evelyn decided to take a cruise with some friends. Before she returned you received a cable from her breaking off your engagement. On that cruise she met Dahlgren, fell in love with him and shortly after her return to Greenvale they were married.

"They settled here, naturally, and Dahlgren joined this club. He was a good golfer. You played with him a lot, pretending to like him, but in your heart hating him.

"It didn't take you long to learn of a golf habit of his, a habit which ultimately caused his death. Invariably, after he hit, even if others were to hit after him, he walked off the tee to the right and then straight ahead.

"Then a few weeks ago you decided to kill him. There would be very few more opportunities, and you could do it without danger to yourself. It would be an 'accident'. If you missed, nothing lost. I've learned you've been spending some evenings in your workshop the past few weeks doctoring the ball that was to kill Dahlgren and clear the way for the renewal of your romance with Evelyn. I know how you doctored that ball, Tilton, and I know why. You thought the regulation ball would not be heavy enough to do the job, so you punched four holes through the cover with this nail.

"You worked out some of the material and then poured in four small pellets of this solder. The four pellets were so placed in the ball that it would lose none of its balance, thus traveling straight. That's an old trick of the fancy shot artists, Tilton, but they usually weighted the ball on one side only so it would act crazily in flight.

"That solder came from this bar which I picked up from your workbench. The manufacturers will vouch for that, because it contains ingredients used only by them. The scrapings in this envelope came from the ball you used. I can prove that, too. After plugging the holes you covered the openings and painted them. Unfortunately for you, the ball, after striking Dahlgren, dropped nearby. And you, Tilton, picked up that ball and tossed it into the rough. Bates saw you.

"And, to clinch my case against you, I've got the evidence of several of the caddies who watched you day after day on the practice tee. Listen, Tilton. They watched you slice balls from that tee and hit the tree which stands off to the right. And those balls hit that tree within a small radius, approximately 5 feet 9 inches from the ground. Dahlgren was 5 feet 11.

"On the Saturday morning you killed Dahlgren you waited until he held the honor over you. After he hit and walked off the tee you set up the murder ball, waited for Dahlgren to reach a spot equivalent to the distance of that tree from the practice tee, and struck — with murder in your heart."

Tilton, tongue flicking over dry lips, rose, gripping the back of his chair to steady his shaky legs.

"You never could prove that!"

"Oh, yes I can," said McGowan, and reached into the package beside him. "This doctored ball..."

"Where'd—" Tilton checked his outburst and his eyes flicked momentarily to the fireplace mantel.

"There it is, Tilton," McGowan continued evenly. "A perfect first degree murder rap — motive, premeditation, opportunity. And I'll have to take you along. Get your hat and coat. I'll wait here.

As Tilton walked unsteadily to the hall clothes rack, McGowan rose and went to the fireplace, reached into a heavy silver vase — a gold trophy — lifted out a discolored golf ball, hefted it and exclaimed:

"Hot damn, my hunch was right!"
