INTRODUCTION

THIS is a bibliography of writings and compilations about New Jersey maps and mapping. It is not a listing of maps.

No part of New Jersey is without map coverage of some kind—large-scale or small-scale, early or modern, printed or manuscript, topographical, geological, whatever. There are thousands of them. The would-be user's need is to learn what maps exist, and where they can be seen. This compilation will be useful to that end.

Recorded here are 307 writings about maps—books, articles, analytics, lists, and other compilations, a few of them unpublished. Two-thirds of these relate to New Jersey entirely. The others are selected items which deal with larger areas but include useful or important New Jersey content. Some pertain to bordering territory such as the adjacent Delaware and Hudson rivers, or Manhattan Island, New York, and Philadelphia.

The Libraries

The entry for each of the separate items includes coded names (see below) of one or more libraries which possess copies of it. In the preparation of this bibliography six libraries (marked with asterisk) have been used chiefly, but others holding copies of certain publications are known, and have been duly credited.

DLC	Library of Congress, Washington, D.C.
NHi	New-York Historical Society, New York City.

A careful detailed record covering in 2,513 entries "all pertinent maps of the Army Map Service, Corps of Engineers of the War Department, the New Jersey Geological Survey, and the United States Geological Survey; maps from many geographical, historical, and commercial atlases, and State and Federal documents; and numerous miscellaneous maps on file in about twenty libraries in the New York metropolitan area and the Library of Congress." Included are maps published both separately and in reports, bulletins, etc., of governmental agencies, among the latter being the State Agricultural Experiment Station and Rutgers University Bureau of Mineral Research. Post route maps, coast and harbor charts, aerial and mosaic photographs are not covered.

The compiler, connected in 1947-1949 with the Rutgers University Department of Geology, was aided by a grant from the University's Research Council. Ironically, because of difficulties in scheduling and time limitations during the final stage of her work, the Rutgers University Library's map collection was not recorded fully. The other twenty-seven locations whose holdings are represented (essentially complete, it is believed) include, besides libraries, a few official agencies, e.g., New Jersey State Highway Department, New Jersey Weather Bureau, etc.
