IN THE publication of this Guide, the Special Collections Department of the Rutgers University Library achieves a kind of transient fruition. It is an important way-station in the servicing of scholarly needs which is both the raison d'être and the religion of the Department.

The organized manuscript collection, which claims a substantial portion of the Department's space and time, dates back—notwithstanding a few items held by the Library as early as the nineteenth century—actually to about 1930 only. Its growth began then with the developing concept of special collections at Rutgers under the late George A. Osborn, long university librarian. In the subsequent years, much effort has been given—within the available resources of time, personnel, etc.—to the steady building and exploitation of the manuscript collection.

The research materials described here have been brought together during those years in many ways. Naturally, parts of the collection have been obtained by purchase, in nearly every such case with the help of interested friends. But the largest part of the collection, by all odds, has come to the Library by way of direct gift. Papers of individuals and families commonly have been received from the individuals and families themselves. Records of the varied societies, business organizations, and a few governmental agencies often have been deposited by officers or members of these bodies, in the interest of preservation and usefulness. Increasingly, also, records which could not be obtained otherwise have been added to the collection in facsimile (microfilm, etc.), thanks to the Library's excellent photoduplication facilities and staff.

Whatever the case, it must be apparent that the existence of this collection owes much to many. Without minimizing the role of endless search and solicitation by members of the special collections staff, one must recognize the great importance of public interest and good will. Of course, donors rate high in the scale of helpers. In addition there are many friends—some being appreciative users of the collection—who have helped to steer available materials into the collection, indeed a few who have actively searched for such materials. The organization known as The Friends of the Rutgers University Library also has been very helpful. Not only has it aided in building the collection, but it has joined the University's Research Council in defraying the publication cost of this volume.

Preface

The Guide has two purposes. One of these is to remind the reader that the Rutgers manuscript collection is a steadily growing body. Additions are constantly sought. But more important than the mission of expansion is that of exploitation. The Guide is published primarily as an aid to scholars, as a means of extending the usefulness of the collection. The term "scholars," incidentally, is applied here very broadly: the resources of the Special Collections Department are open to any searcher, amateur or professional, who is capable of using them.

In this moment of satisfaction, a special word of gratitude is due to the compiler, Herbert F. Smith. Now a member of the University of Wisconsin faculty, Dr. Smith served four years at Rutgers as assistant curator of special collections. This Guide provides one measure of the unusual resources which he brought to bear in those years. From conception to completion, it was his own project, somehow kept in motion through all the crowding pressures of routine. It was an almost impossible task, but finished nonetheless.

It is necessary to remind the reader at this point, however, that the word finished needs qualification. Since the Guide was put into its final form for publication (during 1961), the Library has added further manuscript materials, some of them important and substantial in bulk. The description of these must wait for a supplementary volume.

INTRODUCTION

THE USER of this Guide will find it to be the most comprehensive finding aid available to material in the Manuscript Collection of the Rutgers University Library. Nearly 2000 manuscript groups have been recorded here, with descriptions that should lead the diligent researcher to every manuscript pertinent to his historical, literary, sociological, or scientific quest.

No one, I am sure, could possibly desire or expect a listing of every single manuscript in the collection—well over half a million items. But in order to understand what is included in this Guide, perhaps it is well to understand what a manuscript group is and to recognize the conveniences and disadvantages of describing the collection in terms of such groups.

A manuscript group can be either a body of papers acquired naturally by a person or corporate body during its lifetime, or a collection of papers gathered artificially by some collecting agency later. As an illustration, the John Doe Papers would include all the letters written to John Doe, carbons of the letters he sent, his diaries, accounts, and any manuscripts of his published works if he kept them; a John Doe Collection, on the other hand, would consist of letters written by him or documents about him gathered by someone else. The system of organization used in the Manuscript Collection of the Rutgers University Library deals with both kinds of manuscript groups, but particularly the former. A very few collections have been organized, either because of some special interest in the person whose writings are collected (e.g., Henry Rutgers, Woodrow Wilson, William Dean Howells Collections) or as a viable system of organizing miscellaneous single items acquired (e.g., New Jersey Letters, U.S. Letters, etc.*). Far more frequently, however, manuscript groups have been acquired, organized, and recorded as bodies of papers in the archival sense. Indeed, whenever miscellaneous acquisitions could be so classified and arranged, they have been organized in this manner.

This Guide has been arranged as an index, in several alphabetical sections, to these manuscript groups, and the index to the Guide serves as a single alphabetical index to the whole. It is not and it is not intended to be an index to individual items in the collection. The burden of search still rests upon the user, but, if he is careful and * Such miscellaneous collections have not been listed in this Guide, since their only common denominator is geographic.

Introduction

thorough, he should be able to find material pertinent to his study.

Each manuscript group is entered under the name of the person or corporate body by whom it was gathered, except in the case of collections, as described above. In the few cases where the manuscripts could not be identified, the items have been entered by type, e.g., "Account book" or "Diary," with as much additional information as could be ascertained.

Following the main entry is a notation of the place in which the compiler lived, or the writers wrote, or which is best described by the manuscripts in the collections. Because of the nature of manuscripts, there usually are far more places mentioned than can be noted; it should be understood that the locations given are only the principal ones and that an "etc." is implicit in each case. The inclusive dates, which follow the locations, sometimes include more than two dates, e.g., 1660(1730)-(1810)1950. When the dates are given in this manner, the inner dates include the bulk of the material, with only scattered holdings to the outer dates.

The description of the material following the dates is as detailed as the quality of the papers and the time available to the compiler allowed. The user should be warned, however, that such descriptions are necessarily selective and dependent upon the compiler's objectivity. It is to be hoped that extensive cross-checking and editing has diminished such errors of judgment, but no one could be so sanguine as to expect them to have disappeared entirely. Caveat lector.

The size of each collection is the last item of description. Some papers have been enumerated exactly; more often the number of items has been estimated, or the number of folders, boxes, storage boxes, or cubic feet of shelf space has been given. "Box" means a legal or letter size box five inches in depth, which holds from 500 to 1000 items; a "storage box" measures 16" x 13" x 11" and can hold up to 3000 items.

At the end of nearly every entry will be found, inclosed within parentheses, the pertinent accession number or numbers of the papers described.

Where a body of papers has been extensively described or used as the basis of an article or book, such references are noted in this Guide. In many cases such articles are published in The Journal of the Rutgers University Library (here abbreviated as JRUL).

The compiler received help from so many sources in so many ways that no acknowledgment could be completely adequate. A grant from the Rutgers University Research Council was a sine qua non for much of the time-consuming spadework; Messrs. Robert Falk, Donald Bauder, Frederick Lapidès and Miss Ruth Kohlstadt contributed immensely to the compilation. Help of another kind was received from University Librarian Donald F. Cameron and Professor Richard P. McCormick, both of whom spurred the compiler on to the completion of what seemed an endless task.

Finally, and most important, I wish to thank Donald A. Sinclair, Curator of Special Collections, for much more than assistance in the compilation. In his nearly thirty years in the department, he is in fact responsible not only for this Guide, but for the collection itself, at least in large part, through his tireless efforts at acquisition, for all the finding aids available in the department, for the very archival system itself, which he instituted in 1951, and without which the whole would be a hopeless chaos. His specific help on this one project is perhaps the smallest part of all that he has done to make this Guide possible, and yet that too is unacknowledgeable. His assistance in the editing was invaluable; his curatorial memory, which passes belief, brought out significant details that would otherwise have been hopelessly lost; his encouragement to get the job done on the one hand and his tireless perfectionism on the other are responsible for whatever is valuable in the following pages.
