The Negro and New Jersey

FOLLOWING in the path of recent historic developments, there has been a growth of interest in research topics dealing with the Negro. This is in part the concern of scholars for areas imperfectly explored. In part it is the concern of Negroes themselves for an understanding of their role in American history and in the American community. From both directions, the increased interest has shown itself—no less than elsewhere—in New Jersey.

Owing to the relative neglect of this subject in past years, New Jersey has no history of its Negroes, or even adequate slavery studies. Except for recent surveys concerned with his economic or social difficulties, little research has been devoted to the Negro as a human being, his home and community life, his thoughts, feelings, and customs. Clearly there is work to be done.

Research is necessarily involved with the problem of source material. As regards the Negro in New Jersey, it is a problem indeed. The sources that exist, printed or manuscript, are comparatively scanty, obscure and scattered.

Responding to the obvious need, a Librarians' Committee on the Negro in New Jersey was formed in July of this year, with the purpose of stimulating research and publication. In its plans, first priority has been given to the compilation of a bibliography on "the Negro and New Jersey."

Using various national bibliographies and periodical indexes, members of the Committee have begun assembling records of books, pamphlets, and journal articles. More productive will be a survey of selected libraries. As part of the groundwork for this project, several New Jersey libraries have already provided lists of pertinent material in their own collections.

The present checklist, which describes the holdings of the Rutgers University Library, was prepared for that purpose. It is substantial enough, however, to be of likely independent interest to those attending the American History Workshop, especially since the 1964 session is devoted to the Thirteenth Amendment, by which slavery was abolished in America.

Holdings of the Rutgers Library include undoubtedly the largest available body of material dealing with the Negro and New Jersey (a measure, incidentally, of the size and quality of the Library's New Jersey resources in general). It is by no means complete, however, and it is hoped that interested parties will concern themselves with expanding the collection. Notably lacking, for example, are pamphlet histories of churches, societies, and other Negro institutions. These are all eagerly sought.

The list is divided into three sections. PART I ("The Period of Slavery," through 1865) records a few recent historical studies. The contemporary literature of this period includes narratives of or about individual Negroes; reports, addresses, etc., concerned with abolition or colonization; tracts, orations, sermons, publications of religious bodies, and political emissions, all expressing New Jersey attitudes on slavery. PART II ("After Slavery," 1866-1964) deals heavily with the problems of the Negro in his imperfect years of freedom—poverty, inequalities in education, housing, civil rights, and the like. PART III (dissertations and other monographs) covers both slavery and the more recent topics.

Many of the items listed deal exclusively with some aspect of "the Negro and New Jersey." Others pertain only in part. In the latter case, it has been necessary to make decisions regarding suitability for inclusion. This is a subjective operation at best, but suffice it to say that those items selected are considered to have a pertinent content which is either "substantial" or "significant."

Most of the publications described are housed in the Library's Special Collections Department. Exceptions are indicated by a parenthetical a or d or m (meaning, respectively, "Archives," "Documents Department," and "Main," i.e., the general collection) following the collation. An asterisk appended to one of these designations means that there is a second copy of the item concerned, which is located in Special Collections.
