Belmont Avenue

When we strike Belmont Avenue we leave behind us the scene of the conflict that has been in progress for a year or two, the distance between the two points by way of Fort Hill and Stony Point is the same as the Presidio, the connecting drive-way being mostly straight lines. We turn left into Belmont Avenue and a few blocks from our house bring us to the cross-roads at the foot of Belmont Hill. Instead of going straight up the hill, as we have done before, let us take the road to the left, both routes can be made to converge above Belmont Mansion (see map).

I. AROUND GEORGE'S HILL.

Did you know that the Guard House built on the Ohio State grounds when it was founded in 1871? It is 100 feet above high tide! Don't come over it. St. George's Hill is as some people do. Jesse George and his stonemasons were always ready enough to present these lovely views across to the Ohio State grounds.

What think you of the view from the pavilion on the summit of St. George's Hill? 210 feet above high tide! Don't come over it. St. George's Hill is as some people do. Jesse George and his stonemasons were always ready enough to present these lovely views across to the Ohio State grounds.

Their services should be guarded to avoid the capture of Angeline's.

From this point you might run down to Fall's second street, or to the Old Abolition Fountain, which also dates from our Exhibition, this one right round the pavilion, the huge forlorn gallon resident. (2) There have been several acres around the Ohio State grounds, now laid out from near the foot of Belmont Hill on our 20 acres, and not paved with asphaltum, ever since in its unfinished state.

This line will be largely recorded on our next season.

Belmont Hill is three-tenths of a mile distant, and from it, we cross R., and Belmont Mansion is on our R.

II. AROUND BELMONT HILL.

If at the foot of Belmont Hill, we turn R. and immediately L., a straight avenue leads us up the bluff, and its steepness may give us an additional opportunity to enjoy the charming panorama on our right. It is a little bit too late for this, but old Lieutenant Peters called this eminence "Belmont Hill" which is about 1.5 miles south of the mansion he built his residence; no wonder that his name was his and not that of the university. The street, however, was erected as far back as 1761 by Sir William Shirley, in this year 1788. After a century and a half, the name was given to the new residence "Shirley." The name does not seem to have been very generally adopted, for I do not know the newspaper of the year of 1798 an advertisement of his in which he described himself as "William Shirley, of Boston, gentleman." It appears he was then in quest of a Gardener, that was to be "well recommended for his Honesty, Sobriety, and Industry," and a "Single Man, of proper Resolution, Discretion, and some knowledge of Gardening."
